NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Actor T.J. Miller called 911 to falsely claim that a woman he got into an argument with over loud cellphone conversations on a train had a bomb in her luggage...

with a representative was not immediately returned and the voicemail box for Miller’s cellphone was full and could not accept messages. Miller called in the false bomb information on March 18 after getting into what an Amtrak worker called a “screaming match” with a woman on a train...

Investigators called Miller back and he said the woman kept checking her bag without taking anything out and seemed to want to get off the train and leave her bag behind. “I am worried for everyone on that train,” investigators said Miller told police. “Someone has to check that lady out.” They stopped and removed passengers from the correct train and also didn’t find explosives.

beverages, prosecutors said. A train attendant said Miller “had been involved in hostile exchanges” with a woman in a different row of the first-class car over loud cellphone conversations. Miller faces up to five years in prison if convicted. Monday’s arrest wasn’t Miller’s first brush with the law. He was arrested in Los Angeles in December 2016 after a confrontation with a driver. In addition to his work on “Silicon Valley,” Miller has had roles in “Search Party,” “Deadpool” and “Ready Player One.”
