

ILWACO

WASHINGTON'S FAMOUS FISHING CAPITAL

The legendary salmon fishing village of Ilwaco nestles inside Cape Disappointment at the mouth of the Columbia River. The port buzzes with excitement during most of the year, hosting a fleet of charter, commercial and private recreational fishing boats — all protected by the U.S. Coast Guard station that makes its home on the shore of the cape. Named by an early explorer who didn't know the entryway to a massive river when he encountered it, there is nothing disappointing about this incredible place! — BOB DUKE PHOTO

Ilwaco is an incredible place. It possesses a proud maritime tradition stretching back thousands of years, first in the cedar canoes of the Chinook Indian people and continuing on through the sailing era, up to the commercial and sport fishing fleets of today.

Framed by one of the world's most scenic harbors, Ilwaco offers a first-hand experience of humanity's long partnership with the Columbia River and the Pacific Ocean.

Summer and fall offer unparalleled opportunities to get out on the water, either in the pursuit of fish, or just to partake in the sights and sensations of one of the world's great rivers and nearby ocean waters.

If fishing is your heart's desire, public boat launches provide easy access to the water. There are plenty of charter offices to fulfill any angler's request.

Salmon, catch-and-release sturgeon, tuna and bottom fishing trips are available in season and fresh seafood is available year around.

Seals, sea lions and whales all are spotted offshore. A pod of orcas, or killer whales, is sometimes observed in the ocean here, and humpback whales recently spent weeks inside the Columbia River. See page 6.

A full-service marina and boatyard and a waterfront promenade for strolling makes Ilwaco Harbour Village a stop you don't want to miss. Unique gift shops with that special something you can't find anywhere else and art galleries for that one-of-a-kind treasure dot the waterfront.

Downtown Ilwaco, a short stroll from the port, is in the midst of renewal, with old buildings being refurbished.

If you are hungry, there are several dining experiences to choose from in Ilwaco, from artisanal pizza to perfectly fresh seafood.
