The woman distracted a shop worker while the man allegedly reached over the counter and stole two jars of marijuana from the back of an open glass display case.

"All we have is a partial (license) plate (number), but we have good video of them," Gearhart Police Chief Jeff Bowman said.

Space available at Astoria Makers

The Daily Astorian

Astoria Makers is taking reservations for its new coworking space in the Van Dusen Building.

"Astoria Makers is seeking creative individuals, makers and small-business entrepreneurs to join the upcoming studio collective located in the Van Dusen Building on 10th and Duane streets downtown," said a release from the group. "The collective will now focus entirely on artist-run spaces, some to include open-studio hours and educational classes."

Spaces include small, medium and large studios, a 1,000-square-foot suite of small rooms and a 650-square-foot retail storefront with a private bathroom. All members of the collective will have access to a communal kitchen, lounge, bathrooms and a community room for events. Collective artists will be featured on the Astoria Makers' web page.

Astoria Makers

Spaces at Astoria Makers' headquarters in the Van Dusen Building include small, medium and large studios for working artists.

"The shift to an artist-run collective space developed naturally in the final months of space build-out as the team listened to community input and feedback on how artists best want to use the space," the release said.

Tenants include Audrey Long Ceramics and a design lab focused on traditional woodworking, digital design and customized machine work. Astoria Makers anticipates the next set of rentals coming online in September, with additional spaces ready throughout the fall.
