Recovery: Up to six women with children could move in by December with Greater Oregon Behavioral Health Inc. "What we want to do is really foster a culture of recovery and a culture of progress."

The project is also a "double win" in that it provides additional housing along with a replicable model for rural areas, said Kate Allen, a community development specialist.

"Four units at a time or six units at a time are much more achievable," Allen said.

Tenants will be women who have recently completed a treatment program. They typically will spend six months to two years at the complex as they continue to work toward independence, Wheeler said.

"They won't be brand new in recovery," Wheeler said. "They will have already been done with treatment, and they'll be on the road to recovery for the long haul."

Women will work with peer mentors and have other services provided by Clatsop Behavioral Healthcare, the county's mental health contractor. Their children will have access to early learning services.

The women will work on navigating healthy relationships and parenting techniques, said Amy Baker, the executive director of Clatsop Behavioral Healthcare.

"It makes the most sense to start early with children and families," Baker said. "Their likely outcomes are going to be so much better."

'Nice miracle'

Wheeler started at Greater Oregon Behavioral Health

A house near Uniontown in Astoria is under renovation.

after working with the Oregon Health Authority, where she headed its integrated health programs. One of the first projects in her new position at the mental health organization was identifying affordable housing opportunities for those recovering from substance abuse.

She eventually came in contact with the county, which had recently donated a house in Alderbrook to a non-profit housing organization to fix and sell, with revenue going toward future projects. The move signaled a new tactic as the county grapples with low-income housing woes.

Like the Alderbrook property, the Agate Street fourplex was derelict with garbage and deferred maintenance but rife with potential. At the December meeting, county commissioners passed the property on to the behavioral health organization. "That was a miracle and a nice miracle at that," Wheeler said. "I was really grateful to the county for having the vision to do that."

In addition to the more than $350,000 from Oregon Housing and Community Services, the behavioral health organization and local fundraising, the Northwest Oregon Housing Authority agreed to offer vouchers to help residents.

"I think the connection GOBHI has with CBH is ideal," Allen said. "With NOHA in the picture, the operational side is very solid."

The remodel of the century-old building — headed by contractor Randy Stemper — began in July and is expected to be finished by December. Soon after, up to six women and their children will be able to move in.

"We believe it will be full very shortly after it opens," Wheeler said.

'Drop in the bucket'

The project — unique to the county but not other areas, especially larger cities — is a "drop in the bucket," Baker said. "I can assure you the need is far beyond the four to six families we'll be able to serve. You have to start somewhere."

Scott Lee, the chairman of the county commission and the housing authority board, said the project is a good example of organizations working together to solve the county's housing shortage.

"I'm encouraged by this, and I think these are the kind of creative ideas where we can come together and carve out niches and funding sources," Lee said. "A lot of times we tend to be siloed, and the more we can collaborate, the stronger we can become."

Pantry: Church-run outreach faced closure

Guiendon, who was hired as the church's pastor last year, asked for assistance from the community and other churches last month. A pet boarding and grooming business in Warrenton answered. Bay Breeze Boarding and Grooming donated $2,000 and is challenging local businesses to match the contribution or contribute what they can.

"I think the food bank is a vital link to many families in this community for having proper nutrition and meals," said Brandy Gregg, general manager for Bay Breeze. She and owner Liz McKeren came up with the idea to challenge other Warrenton businesses for support.

"We're a small business," Gregg said. She hopes other, larger businesses will see the need for the pantry, too. "Hopefully we can get them a couple years of operating money and also cover some of the expenses that they need help with."

The Warrenton Food Pantry is a partner organization with the larger regional food bank, and it is the only pantry providing food to people in the Warrenton and Hammond area on a weekly basis. Dusten Martin, chief operations officer for the regional food bank, has been in touch with church leaders about the pantry's financial woes.

Martin is glad to hear the pantry is on better footing than it was in July.

"It sounds like (Guiendon) is getting some support and has some leads on hopefully some more support in the future," Martin said.

"We're always poised to jump in whenever we have to," he added. "That is always a mechanism that is there should the community need us. ... Right now we're here to help support the church in any way we can."

Bridge: Waterfront plans waiting on state is prohibited from doing so, Moore said. The agency either awards a project or cancels it.

On Monday, Moore and Estes asked the City Council to approve a change order for bridge repair work in case the full replacement project doesn't go forward this year. The city planned to pay Columbia Dockworks $42,025 for repair work on the Eighth and 10th street bridges and the trolley trestle. At the time, other repairs to the rest of the bridges were not deemed necessary since the entire structures were going to be replaced.

Now, Moore and Public Works Director Jeff Harrington say it will cost just over $118,000 to minimize closures on the Seventh, Eighth, 10th and 11th street bridges if full replacement work is delayed. The repair work could begin this month.

The city already faced issues with the 11th Street Bridge, where a 3-ton load limit is in place. State inspectors witnessed several violations of the load limit earlier this summer. The state warned the city that if the rule couldn't be enforced, the bridge would need to be closed to all vehicle traffic immediately.
