THE DAILY ASTORIAN // QUESTION OF THE WEEK

What are your Labor Day weekend plans?

"We haven't thought about it yet. I do want to go shopping to get craft stuff for my stepson, who's 5. He likes to paint. He's getting pretty good, too."
Mary Olson, Astoria

"I'm going to the beach. Not our beach. To Florida, and warm water. I'm taking my daughter for some girl time and her senior year kickoff."
Tonia Williams, Astoria

"We're going to the rodeo in Paulina, 60 miles east of Prineville. Been going over there for about 40 years to get away from that coastal mist."
Patrick Albers, Astoria

Health advisory issued for Cannon Beach ocean waters

Higher levels of bacteria found in samples

A health advisory was issued for Cannon Beach.

CANNON BEACH — A recreational use health advisory was issued this morning for higher-than-normal levels of bacteria in ocean waters off Cannon Beach.

Water samples show levels of fecal bacteria at 262 mpn, or most probable number, a testing method used to estimate the number of colony forming units of bacteria. Anything above 130 mpn is considered unsafe, according to the Oregon Beach Monitoring Program.

High readings in ocean waters can come from sources such as stormwater runoff, sewer overflows, failing septic systems, and animal waste from livestock, pets and wildlife, according to the Oregon Health Authority. Officials advise people to avoid contact with the ocean, as well as nearby creeks and contaminated water runoff, as waterborne bacteria can cause diarrhea, stomach cramps, skin rashes, upper respiratory infections and other illnesses.

The advisory comes weeks after the city decided to reinstate a water testing program following high bacteria readings at the Chisana Creek and Gower Street outfalls. While the city has seen high readings on-and-off throughout the summer at these outfalls, advisories are only issued for contaminated marine waters.

City Manager Bruce St. Denis said water samples have shown a few high readings at the outfalls after heavy rain, but can't confirm whether this is a contributing factor to the advisory in marine waters. The city is unaware of any specific events that would trigger the reading, St. Denis said.

Man rescued from Clatsop Spit

The Daily Astorian

A man was rescued Tuesday after being stranded on a sand bar near Clatsop Spit.

The 18-year-old man called Astoria 911 Dispatch at 10:25 a.m. from his cellphone to report that he had become stranded due to a high tide. An MH-60 Jayhawk helicopter crew from Coast Guard Air Station Astoria responded and hoisted the man from the scene about 30 minutes later.

Two response boat crews from Station Cape Disappointment also arrived at the scene to help as needed.

The man was reunited with his family at Fort Stevens State Park, and no injuries were reported.

Window displays spiff up vacant storefronts

The Daily Astorian

Project Storefront, an initiative of the Astoria Downtown Historic District Association to decorate vacant storefronts, launched in the pilot phase this week at the former J.C. Penney and in the Allen Building at 10th and Commercial streets.

"Many Astorians noticed an issue — too many empty storefronts downtown," Michael Angilletta, a member of the downtown association's business development committee, said in a release. "And while arts activities are thriving across the town they lack spaces to be showcased."

The program links artists and community organizations with the owners of vacant storefronts to create window displays. In the windows of the former J.C. Penney, which is being turned into an indoor tap house and food court, is a display about the fundraising campaign to modernize the Liberty Theatre.

"This was a great chance for the Liberty to build awareness for our new fundraising campaign," Jennifer Crockett, executive director of the Liberty Theatre, said in the release. "It's awareness that artists and nonprofits like us would not otherwise afford."

Artists and community organizations can apply at the Project Storefront Facebook page, along with building owners who have empty spaces.
