Train safety tech to be installed by deadline

Associated Press

LONGVIEW, Wash. — Amtrak and state transportation officials say they're confident a new safety technology will be installed on the rail corridor between Seattle and Portland ahead of the Dec. 31 deadline. The technology, known as positive train control, or PTC, was not installed on the Amtrak train that derailed last year south of Tacoma, killing three people and injured dozens.

The Daily News of Longview reports that state officials say service on the Point Defiance Bypass route will resume in the spring. The state said PTC testing and crew training will occur on that route throughout fall and winter.

Criminal probe dropped in sanctuary repeal drive

By PARIS ACHEN
Capital Bureau

The Oregon Department of Justice has closed a criminal investigation into two petitioners who were accused of giving false information to persuade voters to sign a petition to repeal the state sanctuary law.

The complaint has been referred back to the Oregon Secretary of State's Elections Division.

"In sum, our investigation did not reveal sufficient evidence that either circulator violated (Oregon Revised Statute) 260.555, which prohibits, among other things, making a false statement regarding the contents, meaning or effect of a petition," wrote the department's chief criminal counsel Michael J. Slauson in a Wednesday letter to Oregon Elections Director Steve Trout.

Initiative Petition 22 has since qualified for the ballot as Measure 105, Stop Oregon Sanctuaries.

The measure would repeal the more than 30-year law that prohibits use of state and local resources to enforce federal immigration law, when a person's only crime is being in the country illegally.

Robin Fisher, a sociology student at Portland State University, filed a written elections complaint with the Secretary of State's Office early this year against Nikki Condon and Shilo Gest-Vigil, who were circulating Initiative Petition 22 on the Portland State campus.

Condon was being paid by Bend-based Ballot Access LLC to gather signatures; Gest-Vigil was unpaid, said Lee Vasche, the firm's owner.

Fisher claimed the two petitioners misled her about the purpose of IP 22. She submitted with her complaint a link to video — which she posted on YouTube — showing footage of the exchange, but she failed to inform Condon that the conversation was being recorded as required by state law, Slauson wrote. As a result, the footage could not be used as evidence.

The Secretary of State's Office reported that it had received 39 complaints from individuals asking that their signatures be removed from the petition.

The Elections Division is now investigating Fisher's allegation as a civil elections complaint, said Debra Royal, the secretary of state's chief of staff.

To prove a criminal misdeed, the Department of Justice would have had to prove that circulator made a specific factually false statement, which he knew was false at the time he made it, Slauson wrote.

The outcome "is exactly what I expected," Vasche said.

Condon made an unintentional mistake, Vasche said. "He didn't talk as clearly as he should about the measure," he said. Condon and other circulators were subsequently given additional training about how to present the measure accurately, he said.

Several law enforcement, business and civil rights groups have mounted an opposition movement against Measure 105 called Oregonians United Against Profiling. More than a dozen county sheriffs, meanwhile, have signed a letter in support of the repeal.

"It's unfortunate that Oregonians' basic rights are under attack due to Measure 105, which is an attempt to throw out Oregon's law that has addressed unfair racial profiling for over 30 years," said Andrea Williams, executive director of Causa, a statewide immigrant rights organization.
