

Reddick: Intends to become park ranger or marine biologist

Throughout the book, Penny the Harbor Seal gives directions for completing projects, in addition to delivering “fun facts about Seaside, marine debris, and ways you can help protect Penny and her friends.”

To be awarded the official Seaside Scout badge — featuring Penny — people must earn enough points based on their age. Each page is worth a different number of points depending on the difficulty level. The activities range from a word search and scavenger hunt to picking up debris and visiting a tide pool.

The prize badges can be picked up at the Seaside Visitors Bureau once the activities are completed.

“My parents have always taught me to be aware of my environmental impact,” Reddick said.

She remembers visiting the beach once, after a large swell, and marine debris was littered across the sand. As a young person, seeing trash on the beach had a significant impact on her desire to protect the environment. Through her high school education, personal research, and trips with the Girl Scouts to places such as Costa Rica and Ohio, Reddick’s knowledge of environmental issues continued growing, along with her passion to make a difference.

Her intention is to eventually become a park ranger or marine biologist.

“I really want to be in the environment,” she said. “I would love to spend my life in the wilderness in any capacity.”

In February, Reddick reached out to Seaside Public Works Director Dale McDowell to find out how her Gold Award project could have a positive impact in Seaside. They discussed the issue of marine debris, and the city’s lack of resources to substantially address it.

After presenting her idea to the Gold Award committee for approval, Reddick then enlisted the help of her peers, Hannah Johnson and Kyra Stoianschewsky, to design and illustrate the activity book. The Gold Award criteria puts an emphasis on leadership, which includes gathering a team of people with skills and motivation and delegating tasks to them, Reddick said.

Reddick learned that sometimes, as a leader, “it’s hard to back off and let things happen.” She also discovered the value of being “open-minded to new suggestions” from her collaborators from the city, her creative partners, and others.

She is working with the Seaside Elks Lodge and local businesses to procure more funding to help sustain the project.

Town hall: ‘Twitter is not the appropriate platform for trade negotiations’

“A lot of them are seeking asylum for religious persecution,” Bonamici said. “Isn’t that what United States is about?”

After the town hall, Bonamici discussed her opposition to Measure 105. She referenced a letter written by Washington County Sheriff Pat Garrett and District Attorney Kevin Barton opposing the repeal. Clatsop County Sheriff Tom Bergin cited Garrett’s letter as a major reason for penning one of his own — co-signed by 15 other sheriffs from around the state — that supported the measure.

“We want everyone in our community to feel safe and be safe, whether it be reporting a crime, testifying against a criminal,” the congresswoman said.

Bonamici repeatedly mentioned ongoing negotiations to rework the North American Free Trade Agreement. The U.S. and Canada remain far apart in talks, which the congresswoman noted is important.

One person in the audience asked if Bonamici would vote down any agreement that doesn’t enforce labor or environmental standards.

“We’re hearing some positive signs from the labor community about some of the labor and environment protections, but we’ll have to see that to see what it looks like and get to the details,” she said.

Bonamici said Oregon is dependent on trade and brought up a 65 percent tariff recently placed on hazelnuts. The vast majority of the country’s hazelnut supply comes from Oregon.

“That’s devastating to family farms in Oregon,” she said. “There doesn’t seem to be a strategy, but we have to get trade done right.”

While she does not have a vote in the matter, Bonamici mentioned that many have had serious concerns about Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, though she did not specify what those concerns are. She used the example of Oregon federal prosecutor Ryan Bounds, whose nomination for a vacancy on the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was withdrawn after inflammatory writings surfaced from his college days.

“I think you’re seeing more and more people speaking out that the process is wrong,” Bonamici said. “It has happened in the past, but I don’t know what’s going to happen with this nomination.”

The Oregon Democrat threw a jab at Trump’s Twitter usage that spurred laughter from the more than 50 people in attendance, none of whom seemed to disagree with anything she said.

“Twitter is not the appropriate platform for trade negotiations, right?” she asked rhetorically.

Other topics of interest included housing and a proposed space force. Bonamici said the government missed an opportunity to address low-income housing in last year’s Tax Cuts and Jobs Act by not including more low-income housing tax credits and anti-poverty programs. She’s a member of the House Committee on Space, Science and Technology, and opposes a potential space force.

“Space is one of those areas where there has historically been international cooperation,” Bonamici said. “We need diplomacy on the Earth before we need a military force in outer space.”

Cathy Ryan, who was in the audience, asked the congresswoman at one point what she is doing to stop the government from “being held hostage by the GOP.”

“We all want to see people romping and stomping on our behalf,” Ryan said. “I know that that may not be the process, but I’m kind of done with the process.”

Bonamici mentioned that she has been in the minority party in Congress since she was first elected in 2012. “And I don’t think my constituents elected me to only get things done when I’m in the majority, so I’ve been trying to get as much done as I can.”

As part of her answer, the congresswoman said she has called out Education Secretary Betsy DeVos enough times that “I’m kind of losing track.” She poked fun at DeVos’ visit last year to McMinnville

High School.

“I thanked her for visiting a public school. I don’t think she’s been in many public schools,” Bonamici said.

Again, she drew laughter and applause from the crowd.

“I just want to say ‘thank you’ because I just needed to hear it from your lips,” Ryan said. “I know you’re there, but I just needed you to say it.”
