

Young Americans feel anxious about 2018 midterm elections

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Engaged? Check. Anxious? Check.

With weeks to go until the November midterm elections, more young Americans are interested but, according to a new poll, they're also feeling more anxious about the results.

A poll released Wednesday by The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research and MTV found that more young people now say they are feeling anxious about the midterms, compared to July. Nearly half of young Americans ages 15 to 34 now say that they are anxious about the midterms, up from 36 percent in the earlier poll.

The increase is most pronounced among young Democrats: 61 percent expressed anxiety compared with 39 percent in July.

Young voters could play a critical role in the elections, which will determine whether Republicans will maintain their full grip on Congress. But the big question is whether they will show up to the polls. Young voters rarely turn out in numbers that match their share of the population, especially in years when a presidential candidate isn't on the ballot.

That's leaving some voters nervous about what to expect.

Tia Green, a 33-year-old from Lexington Park, Maryland, said she was worried that the election could inflame an already divided political culture. It's an issue she's especially sensitive to after recently seeing posts from a friend on social media that offended her.

"In the end, I ended up de-friending her without any confrontation or anything. But I was kind of saddened by it," said Green, who described herself as a moderate Democrat. "Her views in general were completely disappointing, upsetting and it is hard to deal."

Anxiety about November's elections also grew among independents: 43 percent now describe themselves as anxious, compared with 31 percent in July. Among Republicans, about one-third say they are anxious about the midterms, roughly the same share that said so this summer.

John Laubacker, 32, of Rockport, New York, said he was "appalled" by the state of politics heading into the midterm elections.

"Political polarization is at an all-time high. Nobody wants to be civil with anybody," he said. "Until they figure out that you have to work together whether you like them or not, they're not going to get anything done."

Election interest rises among young

Younger Americans are showing greater interest in November's midterm elections, but also more anxiety, according to an AP-NORC/MTV poll.
