since, KMUN and members of its extended family have become indispensable to the Astoria native.

"I will never leave this town as long as I'm at this station," he said. "This is my life. The most important thing in my life is radio."

Chapman also hosts "Vern's Basement," a weekly jazz program played straight. Unlike Everything, Verne's Basement delivers what's expected from community radio on a weekday, around suppertime.

But it was the absurd, anti-corporate and innovative "Everything" that caught the ear of KMUN's most famous DJ and booster, former Nirvana bassist Krist Novoselic. Early in the show's run, Novoselic lobbied for a better time slot and "Everything" was moved to its current home: 10 p.m. to midnight, every other Saturday.

Along with segments, guests are recurring, part of the "Everything" cosmology. This expanding universe rewards regular listening as Chapman is fond not only of deep, obscure references, but flat-out secret messages and embedded themes.

Altogether, "Everything" resembles something like a late-night variety show. As host, Chapman has anarchic impulses and a wry humor reminiscent of David Letterman. But where Letterman played off guests and a live audience, Chapman, ensconced in the editing room, doubles as auteur. He's as neurotic and controlling as Stanley Kubrick, as outré as the director's conspiracy-minded fans, ever ready to dive deep down the rabbit hole.

Chapman also enjoys pushing the limits, though less of censorship than suggestion. "I like to poke," he admitted.

Chicanery aside, "Everything" is intended first and foremost to entertain, and to do so in a manner that is unlike anything else on the station — or, for that matter, radio at large.

And, for the time being, the airwaves are about the only place you'll find the wicked, rewarding anomaly that is "Everything." The show is practically un-Google-able. Only the latest episode is archived on Radio Free America, and only for two weeks — which is a shame, as it'd make a great podcast archive.

Perhaps the only traditional thing about "Everything" is the broadcast. That the show exists not on the internet, but for the airwaves, underscores not only Chapman's devotion to the show, but the institution itself: live, public radio.

Whether you realize it or not, for the final two hours on Saturday, "Everything" is all around you. 40
