

A FRUITFUL HARVEST

Photos by Colin Murphey/The Daily Astorian

Justin Bogh moves cranberries through one of the Bogh Farm bogs during the fall harvest.

By COLIN MURPHEY
The Daily Astorian

Located just off Highway 101 near Gearhart is an agricultural operation that many people might more closely associate with the state of Washington than Clatsop County. But cranberries are grown here and when the time is right, they have to get out of the field and into a waiting truck. That's when the Bogh family puts on their waders, grabs tools and trudges out into the water. They spend more than a month flooding bogs and gathering the berries that float to the surface.

Dan and Trinda Bogh push cranberries toward a conveyor belt in one of the farm's bogs.

Cranberries tumble into a truck on the Bogh Family Farm.

Justin Bogh, right, helps move cranberries toward the conveyor belt.

Dan Bogh trudges through a flooded cranberry bog on his family's farm near Gearhart.

From left: Justin, Trinda and Dan Bogh harvest cranberries on their farm near Gearhart.