

Bad detour

Sam Rascoe/Clatsop County Historical Society

A 2007 Honda CRV crossing an intersection east at 16th and Exchange streets in Astoria around 2:30 p.m. Friday hit another vehicle traveling north on 16th Street before accelerating and ramming through the sign outside the Clatsop County Historical Society's Heritage Museum. The sign had been refurbished only three weeks prior, said Sam Rascoe, director of marketing for the historical society.

Liquor tax tucked away in Gov. Brown's budget

New tax would start in July

By DIRK VANDERHART
Oregon Public Broadcasting

As she finalized her budget proposal for the next two years, Gov. Kate Brown made no secret of the fact she'd push for higher tobacco taxes, which she believes should play a larger role in funding health care.

At the same time, Brown said she wouldn't pursue higher taxes on beer and wine, despite a request by the Oregon

Health Authority. There wasn't enough "bang for the buck" in that idea in a state with powerful beer and wine industries, Brown told reporters.

But there was one "sin tax" that Brown didn't mention — to the media or the industry that would be affected. Brown wants to increase what the state collects from liquor sales.

Tucked toward the back of Brown's 500-page, $26.3 billion budget proposal released Wednesday is a single mention that the governor hopes to raise the markup on Oregon liquor sales by 5 percent beginning in July. The move would bring an extra $21.2 million into the state's general fund, according to the budget proposal.

The conservative Tax Foundation says Oregon has the second-highest taxes on liquor in the country. Washington state has the highest, according to the organization.

"We're just using every tool in our toolkit to fund Oregonians' priorities, while staying competitive with neighboring states," Brown spokeswoman Kate Kondayan wrote in an email, when asked about the proposed hike.

Charles William Hartill Jr. Logger/Farmer Warrenton

June 25, 1919 — Nov. 26, 2018

Charlie Hartill, 99, died in Longview, Washington, on Nov. 26, 2018 after a brief illness.

True to his character, he refused to give up life and fought the good fight until the very end. He always said, "Don't say what you can't do; say what you can do." He had been living with his daughter for the last year and a half.

Charlie was born to Charles and Agnes Hartill in Astoria, Oregon, in 1919 and had four older sisters. He was the only one in the family born in a hospital, and when his father went home to tell his four daughters about their new baby brother, he said, "It's a boy. Should we keep him?" Charlie's sisters all cried, "Of course we should keep him!" He was doted on by his sisters and was called "Little Charles" by family and friends.

As a child, Charlie spent hours outdoors exploring the Lewis and Clark valley and river. He walked to Melville Elementary School with his cousins. His childhood home was near the Lewis and Clark Mainline, and he enjoyed watching the one-log loads on the steam trains.

He had many chores on the family farm from an early age, which sparked his lifelong love of farming.

He earned money by trapping muskrats, and the principal at Seaside Union High School gave a teenage Charlie a job keeping the school's boiler going.

Charlie graduated from Seaside Union High School in 1938, where he competed in track as a long-distance and relay runner. He started driving a log truck and working as a butcher on the side, a skill his father taught him as a youngster.

When Pearl Harbor was bombed, Charlie tried twice to enlist in the Army, but childhood bouts with scarlet and rheumatic fevers kept him from military service. He then became a gyppo logger and started Hartill Logging. He was one of the first contract loggers for Crown Zellerbach and worked full time until he was 82 years of age.

He loved working in his shop and single-handedly maintained his logging equipment throughout his career. In addition to logging, he ran cows on his small farm in Warrenton, made and sold hay, and contracted fieldwork. In later years, he raised sunflowers, corn and pumpkins and sold them from a roadside stand.

In 1945, he married Irene Nordmark at her family's home in Seaside, and they were happily married for 70 years. They settled in Warrenton and raised three daughters. He liked to travel with his family and enjoyed numerous road trips in the U.S. and Canada. He attended two World's Fairs and went to the Oregon State Fair annually for more than 50 years.

Charlie enjoyed good health for many years and was adored by his family. He was known for his endless energy, tenacity and robust work ethic throughout his life.

He was preceded in death by his daughter, Sandy, and his wife, Irene. He is survived by his daughter and son-in-law, Jill and Colin Brown; daughter, Lori Hartill; granddaughter, Wendy Hovden (Brent); grandson, Ben Brown (Carr); four great-grandchildren, Kai and Klearly Brown and Chloe Irene and Gray Hovden; and sister-in-law Jeanne Nordmark.

At his request, he was cremated. A private family memorial will be held. Memorial contributions may be given to Longview Hospice Care Center at chhh.org or any hospice program.
