

Interior secretary defends legacy as he leaves

Zinke exits under a cloud of suspicion

BILLINGS, Mont. — As former U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke exits Washington chased by ethics investigations and criticism of his actions favoring industry, he told The Associated Press he's lived up to the conservation ideals of Theodore Roosevelt and insisted the myriad allegations against him will be proven untrue.

The former Montana congressman also said he quit President Donald Trump's cabinet on his own terms, despite indications he was pressured by the White House to resign effective Wednesday.

During almost two years overseeing an agency responsible for managing 500 million acres of public lands, Zinke's broad rollbacks of restrictions on oil and gas drilling were cheered by industry. But they brought a scathing backlash from environmental groups and Democratic lawmakers who accused him of putting corporate profits ahead of preservation.

In his first interview since stepping down, Zinke said the changes he instituted meshed with Roosevelt's belief in balance between nature and industry. He added that they were needed in part to unfetter energy companies bound by unreasonable curbs on drilling that were largely imposed under former President Barack Obama.

"Teddy Roosevelt said conservation is as much development as it is preservation," Zinke said, referencing a 1910 speech by the Republican president. "Much of our work returned the American conservation ethic to best science, best practices ... rather than an elitist view of nonmanagement that lets nature take its course."

Zinke mentioned Roosevelt often during his almost two-year tenure, and historian Patricia Limerick said it's accurate that the former president talked of development as a component of conservation. But Limerick noted Zinke's recommendations to Trump to reduce the size of national monuments in the West and elsewhere was in direct contrast to Roosevelt's embrace of the law that allowed their creation, the Antiquities Act of 1906.

Then-U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke speaks at the Williston Basin Petroleum Conference in the Bismarck Event Center in Bismarck, N.D.

"You don't get to call yourself a follower of Roosevelt if you're really chiseling away at one of his principal heritages," said Limerick, who chairs the board of the Center of the American West at the University of Colorado, where she's a history professor.

House Democrats plan to put Zinke's policies under the spotlight with oversight hearings beginning next month, said Adam Sarvana, a spokesman for U.S.

Rep. Raul Grijalva of Arizona, the Democrat in line to lead the House Natural Resources Committee.

The hearings initially will focus on policy changes such as "giveaways" to the oil and gas industry under the leadership of Zinke, Sarvana said. He added they later could be expanded to include the various ethics investigations pending against Zinke, a former Navy SEAL and avowed Trump loyalist.

The investigations have ranged from a probe into a land deal involving Zinke and the chairman of energy services giant Halliburton, to questions about his decision to reject a casino in Connecticut sought by two tribes.

During his interview with the AP, Zinke denied a Washington Post report that Interior Department investigators believe he may have lied to them, which has reportedly prompted an examination of potential criminal violations by the U.S. Department of Justice's public integrity section.

Several other investigations into Zinke concluded with no findings of wrongdoing. In one case he was faulted by investigators for violating a department policy by allowing his wife to ride in government vehicles with him. That report also said the Interior Department spent more than $25,000 to provide security for the couple during a vacation to Turkey and Greece.

For the energy industry, Zinke brought relief from rules imposed under Obama that were meant to limit drilling in sensitive wildlife habitat, curb emissions of the greenhouse gas carbon monoxide and protect water supplies.

Despite the Democrats' newfound power in Washington after taking control of the House of Representatives, industry representatives said Zinke's impact will be lasting. That's because they involved agency regulations rather than congressional action and came at the order of Trump, said Dan Naatz, vice president of government relations for the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

Floral Haze Vintage offers all things 1960s, '70s

Shop is upstairs on Commercial Street

A cross between Velma and Daphne from "Scooby-Doo" fame, Megan Davis looks as if she walked straight out of the 1960s.

The 21-year-old entrepreneur, who's been collecting all things 1960s and '70s for the past several years, recently opened her own psychedelic clothing and accessory store, Floral Haze Vintage, in the upstairs of the Copeland Building on Commercial Street in downtown Astoria.

"I've always been into '60s, '70s music," she said. "I like stuff with mushrooms on it. It seems like I woke up one day and went really gung-ho into vintage."

Davis studied massage therapy and worked at an antique shop in Eugene.

She had been selling online for several years, but heard from a friend there was space available in the upstairs of the Copeland

Edward Stratton/The Daily Astorian

Megan Davis has opened a vintage clothing shop, Floral Haze Vintage, using her own curated collection of largely 1960s and 1970s fashion.

Building amid an eclectic collection of businesses, including an apothecary and a beauty bar.

Getting to her shop involves popping through a double door on Commercial Street and winding up a few flights of stairs. Down the hall is Davis' psychedelic, pastel-heavy suite, filled with clothing, accessories and all manner of knickknacks for sale.

Her offerings cater more toward women, aside from a rock 'n' roll T-shirt collection. She hopes to add Pyrex and other vintage kitchenware in the future.

"If it's weird and ugly, I like it — if it's unapologetically tacky," she said.

Davis is confident in her ability to make the store a success, buoyed by her online presence. She said people are still managing to find her. "With most niche things like this, people will seek it out," she said.

Floral Haze Vintage, upstairs at 1168 Commercial St., is open from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Sunday.
