

way their lives have turned out — or not turned out,” Brown said.

The play is also about choices.

“Sometimes choices are foisted upon us; we don’t make those choices,” Brown said. “I think that is very much the case of Sonia and Vanya. I don’t think they ever considered there was a choice to take care of their parents or not, they just did. I don’t think they saw a way out.”

“Masha, on the other hand, is the oldest — that says something about making choices. She did make choices. But she has regretted some of her choices because, I believe, it has made her into a person she didn’t want to be. It took this visit home to figure that out.”

Knotty problems

While the siblings become entangled in their familial ties, three other characters present some knotty problems of their own.

Spike is Masha’s bouncy, energetic boy toy, who “doesn’t really understand about subtlety, so he’s really just out there,” said Daric Moore, who plays the young, struggling Hollywood actor.

“He’s the driving force behind what Masha is doing to some degree,” Moore added. “She’s trying to show him off, she’s trying to impress her siblings.”

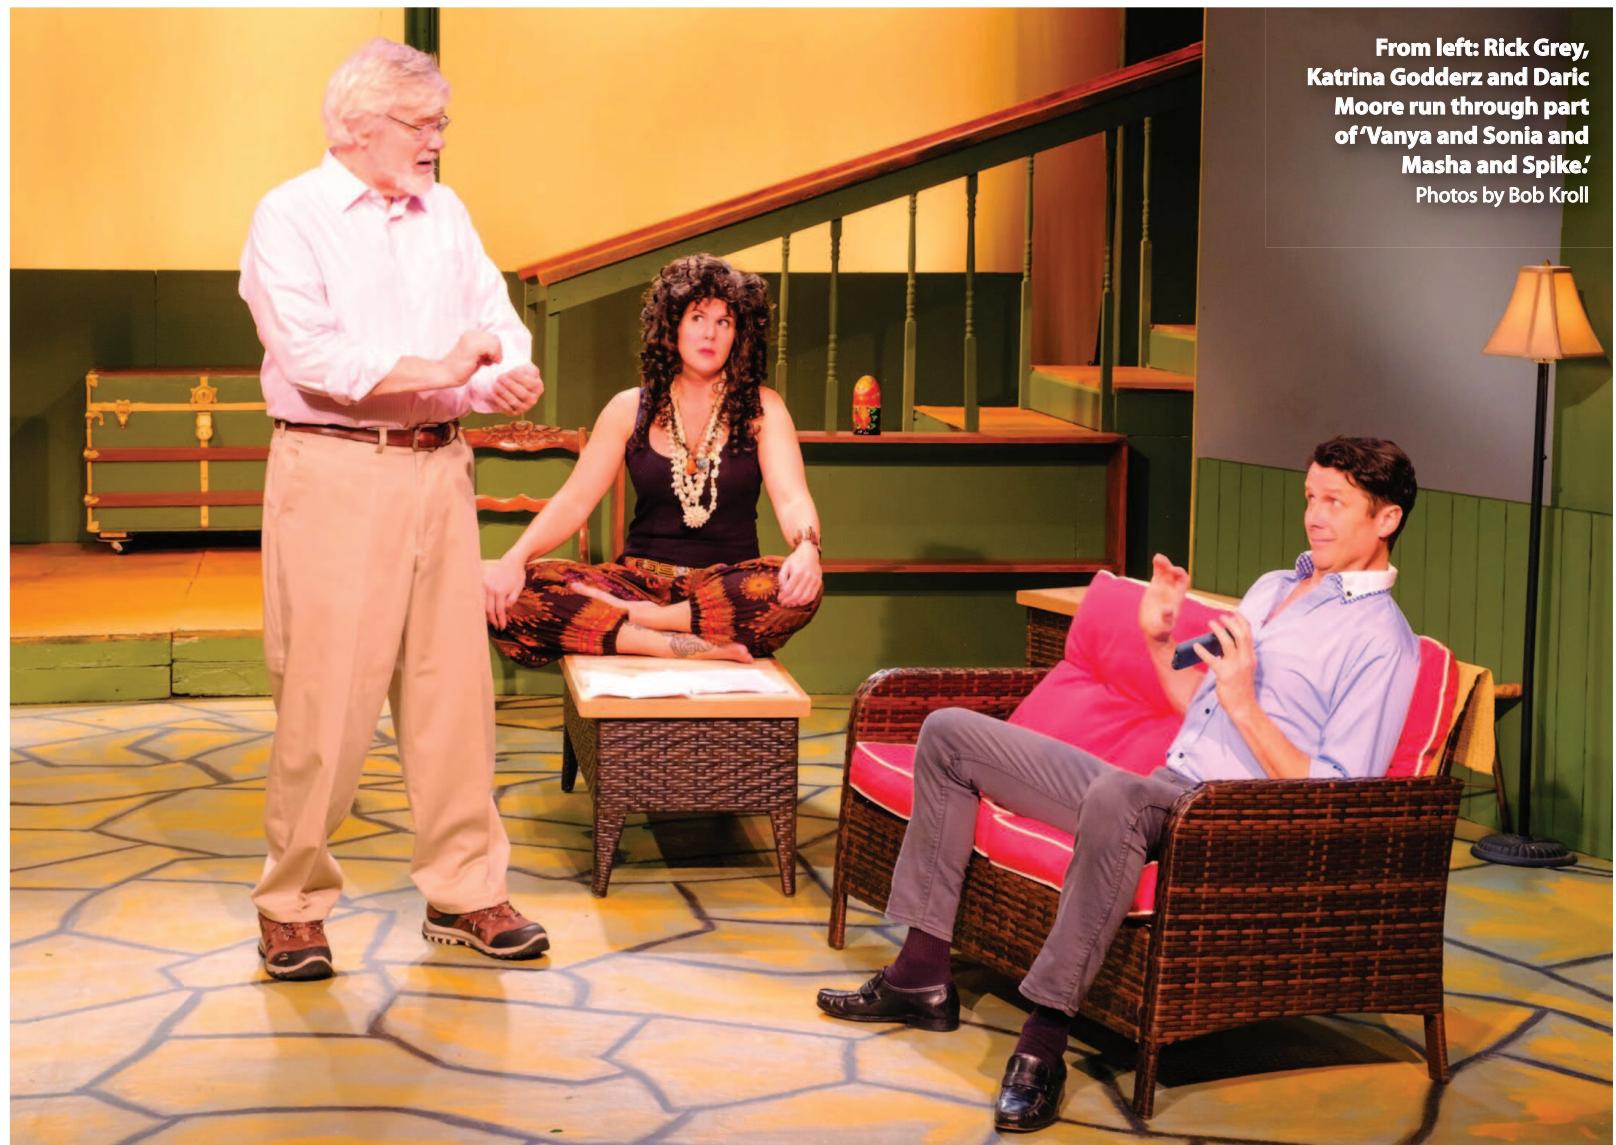

Much to Masha’s consternation, Spike shows an interest in Nina (played by Ann Branson), a young star-struck woman who desires to be an actress.

In her own way, Nina brings the family closer together by perceiving each person’s talents they never recognized themselves, Branson said.

“She sees them all as individuals. So it helps break them out of this routine they have been in for so long, to see themselves differently. And this helps them relate to each other differently,” she said.

But Cassandra, the cleaning lady who accurately prophesizes the family’s future with elaborate pronouncements or short outbursts, adds a supernatural element to the play.

“She’s the foreshadower,” said Katrina Godderz, who plays Cassandra. “She’s an impartial observer of the family, but she cares about them. So she’s somebody, who, in a sense, ties them together.”

From left: Rick Grey, Katrina Godderz and Daric Moore run through part of ‘Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike.’
Photos by Bob Kroll

Although there are references to Chekhov plays, those who haven’t seen or read the writer’s works won’t have trouble following “Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike.”

The cast includes experienced actors: Rick Gray (Vanya) is new to the Coaster, but has an extensive background in regional and professional theater; Sheila Shaffer (Sonia) and Gigi Chadwick (Masha) have performed in numerous Coaster plays, and Shaffer has directed several.

The cast, Brown added, understands the themes Durang pursues in the play.

“Durang is a little daunting; it’s not a Neil Simon comedy,” she said. “There’s a lot to think about when you’re taking on Durang. But this cast has dealt with it very well.” CW

Rick Grey and Katrina Godderz act out a scene from the play.