Mt. Hood: Cooper Spur retains spare simplicity of mid-20th century skiing

The lessons were great, but the personalities of the girls, like the personalities of mountains, were attracted to different things. Older daughter Lindsay fell in love with the quiet solitude and snow-flocked conifer trails of cross-country skiing. Younger daughter Grace loves the challenge, speed and adventure of downhill skiing. One girl is Mt. Adams, the other Mt. Hood.

Which leads us back to Cooper Spur.

David Rose Cooper was a Scottish immigrant who built a toll road up the north side of Hood in the 1880s. He started the first hotel for those adventurous souls wanting to get on the mountain.

It was really just a summer tent camp for guided expeditions up from Hood River well-furnished tents and a kitchen with Cooper's wife doing the cooking and daughters waitressing. A year later in 1889 a more permanent establishment was created higher up the mountain at the 6,000foot level: the Cloud Cap Inn. In 1890 the first ski trip on Mt. Hood was recorded.

In 1927 the land was cleared by the local ski club, and a ski jump was set up at what is now the Cooper Spur Ski Area. In the 1950s, a man named Jack Baldwin set about establishing little Cooper Spur as a family-friendly and affordable place to enjoy the mountain.

These days it is owned by Mt. Hood Meadows, but it retains the spare simplicity of mid-20th century skiing.

The Cloud Cap Inn is closed to the public except for special tours, but there is still a very nice hotel and cabins surrounding a fine restaurant on the mountain's north side at Cooper Spur. You can walk outside your hotel room door, put on your cross-country skis and enjoy the meadows and groomed trails of the surrounding forest.

The ski area is much improved from back when I was learning to ski. There is a single lift that gives access to a few short, simple slopes, uncrowded and uncomplicated. Perfect for beginners building their skills.

Little old Cooper Spur is like the mountain itself. Something for everyone.
