

Mark Graves/The Oregonian

A group called South Sound Alliance gathers on the N.E. 12th Avenue overpass, across Interstate 84, on Wednesday in Portland to mark May Day.

MAY DAY EVENTS CELEBRATE WORKERS

The Daily Astorian

Events in Portland and Seattle celebrating May Day were largely peaceful this year, with hundreds of people taking to the streets to celebrate workers' and immigrant rights.

One group marched to the U.S. Immigration and Customs

Enforcement headquarters in Portland and were met by police, but there were no reports of violence as opposed to previous years.

May Day, or International Workers' Day, has traditionally been marked in countries around the world.

Mark Graves/The Oregonian

People rally at Holladay Park in Portland to mark May Day.

AP Photo/Ted S. Warren

Protesters take part in a march for immigrant and workers' rights on May Day in downtown Seattle.

AP Photo/Ted S. Warren

Smoke rises from a smudge pot as dancers with CeAtl Tonalli, a traditional Aztec Dance group, pause while taking part in a march for immigrant and workers' rights on May Day in downtown Seattle.

AP Photo/Ted S. Warren

A protester yells into a bullhorn as he takes part in a march on May Day in downtown Seattle.

AP Photo/Ted S. Warren

Seattle police officers on bikes stand in front of the Amazon Spheres during a march for immigrant and workers' rights in downtown Seattle.