both Portland and Nashville. They will sing harmonies and play the guitar, viola and banjo and the audience can expect original music as well as new takes on famous folk songs.

“We have a lot of great stories from being on the road together, and since we’re best friends it’s a fun act,” Clark said. “But we hit you in the heart strings when we start singing.”

The two musicians have been solo artists for most of their careers and best friends for most of their lives. When Grinels moved to Portland last year, the two decided to combine forces and create an album, also called “Siren Songs.” Gala goers will get the chance to meet Clark and Grinels and buy the album.

“I have always admired the Liberty Theatre,” Clark said. “I think it’s really amazing that we’ll be part of raising money to help renovate it.”

Jennifer Crockett, the theater's executive director, at last year's gala. The event raised $300,000.
