

Shakespearean history served at Fort George

ASTORIA — Head to Fort George Brewery and catch a lecture from Clatsop Community College professor, Dr. Julie Brown, entitled “Shakespeare & Shipwrecks: What English Royal Navy Ships Can Teach Us about Shakespeare’s Plays” at 7 p.m. tonight, 1483 Duane St.

This is a free event. Food and beverage is available for purchase, though no purchase is necessary. Doors open at 6 p.m. Minors are welcome.

This summer, Brown studied Shakespeare at Cambridge University and then continued on a journey of climbing aboard shipwrecks in the name of literary research. Come learn from her endeavors. With Brown at the helm, this month’s Ales & Ideas lecture will reveal clues to solve a Shakespearean mystery: the true identity of a character who has baffled readers for 400 years.

The event is part of the Ales and Ideas lecture series, which happen on the first Thursday of the month. For more information, contact jkovich@clatsopcc.edu.

Work by Betsey Nelson.

Ambiguity and indistinctness are the hallmark of the masterful landscape paintings exhibited by Betsey Nelson. A painter’s painter, Nelson utilizes traditional oil painting technique to create a series of small coastal landscapes rendered with a narrow palette that tends toward the familiar grey of the fog-bound North Coast. The atmospheric conditions depicted in the paintings suggest early morning or evening, and a dream-like quality blankets the landscape. Nelson says she paints to forget about global warming and all that is wrong in the world. But here, with a thoughtfulness as subtle as her paintings, she nods to the theme of the show in the absence of clear, sharp lines in the paintings and leaves all of us asking, “Where is the edge?”
