

'Our Shrinking World' by David Crawford is on display at Bronze Coast Gallery.

Continued from Page 8

Guests will be able to watch virtual tours and presentations of the gallery's artwork on Facebook and Instagram.

"It will allow people to feel like they are in the actual gallery space," said Summer Peterson, the gallery's social media manager.

The gallery's main exhibit will be its 34th annual "miniature show," where local artists submit various types of artwork that must meet the requirement of being no larger than 6 by 6 inches.

Musical squares

In addition to the myriad of artwork that will be featured throughout Cannon Beach, local musicians will perform at the Coaster Theatre Courtyard, Ecola Square, Sandpiper Square and The Landing.

A series of paintings by Scott Leahing on display at Cannon Beach Gallery.

The outdoor performances will be set up so attendees can enjoy the music while social distancing from others, Paino said.

"The number one factor for the festival is the health and safety of everybody. That (needs) to be first and foremost," Paino said.

Musicians will include Bobby Beaulieu, Chris Beers, Jon & Jay and many others.

"It's always great to see local performers and give them an opportunity to share their music with their community," Paino said. "It's also really cool to walk from one end of the Cannon Beach downtown area to the other and be able to listen to music the entire time."

Something new

While the festival won't include its traditional auction and fashion show, there will be a new event guests can look forward to. The chamber has planned a paint and sip event where guests will be able to sit, socially-distanced in a limited capacity indoor area and be guided through creating stormy-weather artwork of their own.

The event is scheduled for Saturday evening. Tickets can be reserved on the Cannon Beach Chamber of Commerce website.