One of Astoria's many charms is our delightful neighborhoods.

Historic Downtown is the heartbeat of Astoria encompassing from west to east 5th Street to 17th from north to south between the waterfront to Exchange Street. Listed on the National Historic Registry, this neighborhood is the primary entertainment, dining and shopping district for the community with easy walking access to the river walk, waterfront, historic buildings, and museums.

Union Town is one of the oldest neighborhoods and is also listed on the National Historic registry. Union Town is the area from the Dough Boy display to the roundabout and from Alameda to the water. The west mooring basin and its marina is a popular place to enjoy the beauty of the area. Alameda offers an almost untouched street of 1890 – 1910 homes. This neighborhood offers hotels, two canneries, a shipyard and three of the oldest bars on the coast!

Upper Town (meaning upper Astoria) was historically the section of town separated from downtown by Scow Bay. Its borders are 40th on the east, the area where the street numbers skip from 23rd to 26th on the west, the river on the north, and Irving on the south. For reference, a scow is a flat-bottomed barge. Today Upper Town is most noted for the Firefighter's Museum located at 29th and Marine Drive. Also in this neighborhood are some historic buildings, including a pub called Desdemona – affectionately referred to as “The Dirty D” in homage to its once rough-and-tumble past that included a reputation for its trap-door where unlucky fellows would be shanghaied.

East of town is home to the historic Pier 39 that offers a cannery museum, brewery and restaurant, coffee shop, overnight accommodations, a crab company and variety of other goods and services. Access to Pier 39 is over a wooden pier that juts out into the Columbia River and accessed by foot or car.

Alderbrook is located just off Highway 30 east of town and is the collection of homes that can be seen below the highway. Established in the late 1800's, at one time it was its own community with a mill, canneries, a school, and church – all connected to the rest of Astoria via a trolley car. Today the Astoria River Walk connects Alderbrook to downtown and beyond. Walking across the old railroad trestles provides a stunning view of the river and the community. Astoria has many other neighborhoods that locals often reference including Peter Pan, the South Slope (WWII and newer homes), Miles Crossing, and Jeffers Garden – each with their distinct personalities.
