Artist inspired by NASA
creates large-scale spacescapes

ZOE BUCHLI

Marrying science and art is what Seaside artist David Lehigh describes as a challenge.

He jokingly says he hears from people his pieces “give them nightmares.”

“It’s not always pleasant stuff I’m painting, I’m not interested in creating more ‘acceptable’ themes,” Lehigh explained.

Owner of Spaceprint, Lehigh creates large and small-scale paintings that he uses as a vessel to investigate the environment of the universe and how solar systems, planets and galaxies interact with one another.

David Lehigh’s ‘Euclid’ is a space landscape that is an expression of space and time, with nebula formations and currents within inter-galaxy strata and black holes erupting throughout a millennia.
