COMMUNITY BRIEFS

Project documents king tides

CoastWatch and the Friends of Cape Falcon Marine Reserve are holding an online event for those who live and work on the North Coast, "King Tides in Your Neighborhood," at 7 p.m. Thursday, at oregonshores.org/engage/featured-events, where registration is also available.

King tides are the highest tides of the year, and coincide with the new and full moons November through January. The first set of king tides this year is Nov. 5 to Nov. 7. The Oregon King Tides Project's goal is to document the inland reach of these tides on the Oregon Coast with photography, tracking sea level rise and envisioning how it will change in the future.

This event focuses on North Coast locations that have yet to be monitored, as well as needed comparison photos of regular high tides. Friends of Cape Falcon Marine Reserve coordinator Kristin Bayans will join CoastWatch coordinator Jesse Jones and share news about the Cape Falcon Marine Reserve, and photo-points needed around the reserve.

For information, email jesse@oregonshores.org
