Trail's End offers watercolor workshop featuring seascapes

GEARHART — Artist Linda Gebhart will lead "Painting a Watercolor Seascape," a workshop focused on ocean landscapes of the North Coast, at Trail's End Art Association on Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon.

All materials for the workshop will be provided by the gallery. Each participant will leave the workshop with a completed, matted seascape to display and treasure.

Trail's End Art Association is the oldest nonprofit group of its kind on the North Coast. The association's Gearhart gallery hosts monthly shows in addition to its mainstay prints, cards, jewelry and pottery.

Gebhart paints seascapes, architecture, and landscapes, often using recycled materials for matting and framing her work.

Participation in this workshop costs $30 for members of Trail's End Art Association and $35 for non-members. To register, visit www.trailsendart.org or visit the gallery.

Portland Audubon Society offers snowy plover patrol training sessions

PORTLAND — The Portland Audubon Society will partner with the Oregon Parks and Recreation Department and the Institute for Natural Resources to offer a series of virtual sessions about Western snowy plovers on Saturday and Sunday.

The virtual series aims to train volunteers to participate in the Snowy Plover Patrol Program, an effort to collect data on the local, protected bird species over the course of spring and summer. Topics for these training sessions will include history, threats, legal status, management and data collection strategies.

Madeline Kalbach

Western snowy plovers are a protected species and are aided by habitat-conservation efforts on the north end of the Long Beach Peninsula.

This event is free and open to all. For more information, visit www.audubonportland.org.

North Coast Chorale to perform in Astoria

ASTORIA — The North Coast Chorale will perform a selection of Easter hymns, chorales, spirituals and gospel songs at the First Presbyterian Church in Astoria at 4 p.m. on Sunday.

Founded to promote choral literature and music education, the North Coast Chorale has offered musical fellowship in a community setting for more than 30 years. With direction from Denise Reed and support from the Oregon Arts Commission and Oregon Cultural Trust, the group follows an annual calendar of performances, including this much anticipated spring concert.

Admission to the concert is free, while donations are appreciated. Masks and COVID vaccination are encouraged for all attendees. For more information, visit www.northcoastchorale.org.
