

'Cellobop' performance set for Raymond Theatre

Gideon Freudmann performs on an electric cello.

RAYMOND, Wash. — Cellist Gideon Freudmann will perform "Cellobop," a unique concert as part of the Sunday Afternoon Live series at the Raymond Theatre on Sunday from 3 to 4 p.m.

Sponsored by the Willapa Veterinary Service and Ena Bale, the event will lead off a trio of concerts for the venue.

Freudmann's improvisational electric cello performances feature a mix of classical, blues, jazz, electronic, funk and folk music, adding riffs and layers to form a unique sound. The cellist regularly contributes music to NPR's "All Things Considered" and has been featured on multiple television programs. He also regularly provides soundtracks for silent film showings.

Admission for the show is $20 in advance or $25 at the door, and $5 for students. Doors open at 2:30 p.m. Tickets can be purchased online or at Alder & Co., Raymond Drug and South Bend Pharmacy. For more information, visit www.sundayafternoonlive.org.

'From Horsethief Butte looking East,' by Ken Hochfeld, is on display at LightBox Photographic Gallery.

LightBox opens exhibits featuring the Columbia

ASTORIA — Four photographic exhibits featuring the Columbia River as a subject, including the works of Robbie McClaran, Ken Hochfeld and Pat Welle will open at LightBox Photographic Gallery on Saturday from noon to 7 p.m.

McClaran will exhibit "The Great River of the West," a series made up of silver gelatin contact prints from an antique large format camera, while Hochfeld presents two exhibits. The first,

"Pages: The majestic Columbia River," features the river's precolonial culture and inhabitants, and the second, "Small Communities of the Lower Columbia River," turns a lens on places and people of the region. A retired scientist, Welle's exhibit, "There and back again," will explore native habitats of the Columbia River estuary, a critical reach for migrating salmon.
