Buckaroos, Chasing Ebenezer, Carly Ann Calbero and others are set for the Cannon Beach Farmers Market's three month run.

Meanwhile, the Seaside Farmers Market is set to have Brownsmead Flats perform for the first time this season. "We've been lucky for them to have some time for them to be available to play for us," Wildt said of the music groups slated to play.

If you can't wait until you get home to crack open a treat purchased from the market, tables and areas for snacking and socializing will be set up for customers to enjoy artisanal food and beverages at both markets.

Lloyd and Wildt agree these events are vital for supporting small coastal businesses. "When the money is spent locally, then those vendors are able to grow and support the community even more," Wildt said, noting that vendors give back to the community in a variety of ways. Having the opportunity to meet local growers and business owners is also a unique benefit.

Both leaders agree that local produce picked up at a farmer's market adds flavor and nutrition to any kitchen. "Making fresh food accessible for everyone is a core part of the event, and speaks to the Seaside market's broader mission of inclusivity," Wildt said.
