HOOSIER STATE ROMANCE CULMINATES AT HOOD RIVER

Miss Madeline Cox, aged 23, granddaughter of Mrs. Joseph Bates, one of the pioneer residents of Mt. Alry, and Joseph A. Tarkington, were married June 19 at the latter's ranch, Hood River, Oregon, says the Cincinnati Times Star.

The groom is a cousin of Booth Tarkington, the author, and lived in Indianapolis until a few years ago, when he went west to seek his fortune. Miss Cox left Cincinnati June 3 and traveled alone all the way to Oregon to join her prospective husband.

The marriage is the result of a school days romance. Mr. Tarkington first met Miss Cox ten years ago, when he was a cadet at the Ohio Military Institute, near Mt. Alry. When he left Indianapolis for the West he promised to send for her as soon as he had established himself. Miss Cox broke the long journey to Oregon with over-night stops with friends in Chicago and St. Paul.

Suggests Monument to Mrs. Coe

A reader of the News, who looks on Mrs. Nathaniel Coe as the founder of Hood River and who recently contributed an article on the subject to the school magazine, "The Blue and the Gold," suggests that the people of the Apple city and valley erect a monument to her memory. He says: "The first name given to Hood river by Americans was Dog river. The Indian name was Waucoma, meaning cotton-woods; and it referred merely to the cottonwoods at the mouth of the river.

"Now, as Dog River was not a fitting name and Waucoma had no significance in the English language, it would not have seemed nearly so grand to have it to say that the finest apples in the world were grown at Dog River, Oregon. The crowned heads of Europe would, perhaps, not have liked the idea of ordering their apples from such a place. And what is still more objectionable, all native born, myself included, would have been Dog Riverites.

"I would now suggest that the people of Hood river erect a monument to the memory of Mrs. Nathaniel Coe, sponsor of Hood River. A sculptured figure of her, placed in some prominent part of the town, would be a suitable memorial; and should be contributed to by all native Hood Riverites."

Youngsters in Trouble

A couple of Cascade Locks youngsters, accused of entering the post office there without leave or license were given a hearing before Judge Derby Monday, sitting as judge of the juvenile court. After hearing the evidence Judge Derby allowed one of the boys to depart and gave the other a reprimand. The state was represented by E. H. Hartwig and the defendants by A. A. Jayne.

Wants Information

"Hood River News,
 "Dear Sir:—I am a subscriber of the News. Will you please tell in next week's issue if Trixy, the great circus horse, is dead or alive, and how she died.

"Respectfully yours,

Erupts Spitz and Newtowns

A picture of Mount Hood and Lost Lake, painted by Miss Fair Winans, daughter of W. R. Winans, and exhibited in the window of the office of the Hood River Realty Co., reflects considerable credit on that young lady's ability as an artist. From the top of the mountain smoke is seen issuing, mingled with Spitzenburgs and Newtowns, which are being erupted in profusion.
