HANNON IS PERSISTENT.

Connecticut Man Says Mrs. Eddy Died Eighteen Months Ago.

Robert Charles Hannon of South Windsor, Conn., who recently made the claim that Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy had designated him as her successor as leader of the Christian Science church, persists that his statement is true, but he has taken no active steps to gain the place. After giving out his first statement Mr. Hannon, who has long been identified with Christian Science, made a second statement in which he declared that Mrs. Eddy died eighteen months ago and that in the few public appearances she was supposed to have made since that time she has been personated by other women. Mr. Hannon asserts that the men and women who have been closest to Mrs. Eddy arranged the deception and carried it out. He says he hopes soon to have absolute proof of the truth of his statement.

The belief that Mrs. Eddy has been dead for many months, possibly for several years, has many adherents. Several years ago the story was published, and at that time a meeting was arranged between Mrs. Eddy and representatives of the press. The meeting took place in Mrs. Eddy's home in Concord, N. H., but it was surrounded by so much mystery and was under such conditions that it was not convincing. Some of the reporters who were present were sure that the pale, fragile woman they saw for a few moments was Mrs. Eddy; others said it might have been some other woman. At any rate, the demonstration did not have the effect that the guardians of Mrs. Eddy hoped it would have, and the story that the aged woman's death had been concealed continued to be heard.

AN ENGLISH TRAIN WRECK.

Fatal Accident Occurred at Junction in the London District.

The English are prone to boast of the safety of railway travel in Great Britain, and it is a fact that there are fewer serious accidents on the English roads than in America. This may be partly due to the fact that England is more thickly settled, traffic is heavier and consequently more profitable, so the roads can afford to spend more money on safety appliances and for the employment of a greater number of men.

But accidents do happen in England just the same as elsewhere, and when they occur they are not always the result of causes that could not be avoided. When a speeding express train runs into a local train standing at a station it means that some one blundered—that the intangible something known as "the human element" failed.

In a recent accident at Willesden Junction two carriages of a train standing at the platform were telescoped by a moving train, two passengers were killed, and forty-five were injured. English papers commented on the seemingly miraculous escape of the occupants of the telescoped cars, which were jammed together in a tangle that made it seem impossible that any one inside could have lived.

Both trains were crowded, as the accident occurred during the rush hour of the morning, when business men and workers were hurrying to town. The accident is described as one of the most serious ever known in the London district.
