Entered as second-class matter, Feb. 10, 1909, at the post office at Hood River, Oregon, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Pertinent and Impertinent The Czar of Russia has bought a new paper. Now he will get acquainted with real trouble.

Every time a war appears on the carpet somebody inappropriately calls The Hague conference into action.

The world is getting better.
There were only two arrests last year of presidents for looting banks under their charge.

That talk about permissible explosives may be all right in its place. What we want is an explosive that will refuse to blow up at the wrong time.

If the excellent health of many of our great financiers had as much market value as their rumored indispositions, what a bull market we would have.

"Don't say 'politics is crooked,'" enjoins the Brooklyn Standard Union. No; say "politics are crooked." That's nearer the comprehensive truth.

A woman who has been married eight times confesses that she knew not what love was until she read Laura Jean Libbey.
Never mind! Some day she may meet Nat Goodwin.

To be perfectly frank, isn't it rather risky to predict that Canada will not be annexed until we know whether Carnegie, Rockefeller or Morgan wants that section of this terrestrial ball?

"Laugh and the world laughs with you; weep and your nose is red," says the Milwaukee Journal.
Since when did it become necessary in Milwaukee to weep in order to get a red nose? Milwaukee has a surer way than that.

Editorial Comment
Salem will have a horse show on April 7 and 8. It is expected the event will bring out a fine display of draft, carriage and riding horses, and a campaign will be started right away to raise funds for awards that will insure a large list of entries.

Mining men of the state met in Portland during the past week to make plans for the entertainment there of the Northwest Mining Congress on May 16, 17 and 18. At that time it is expected to have each district of the state represented and large numbers of outside mining men will be entertained.

Salem lays claim to a unique distinction among the capital cities of United States. It has made a greater net gain in population than any other state capital. Salem shows additions to her population amounting to 231.9 per cent during the ten year period, as given in the figures of the census. No other state capital comes anywhere near this record.

Dates for the Oregon Development League convention in Astoria have been fixed for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, August 14, 15 and 16.
This will be the Astor Centennial is in progress and convention visitors will give a part of their time to this historic celebration. The convention dates were decided after a conference between the Astoria Commercial Club and the Centennial management.

Redmond will have a double-barreled celebration on July 4th, and Independence Day will not be its only significance. The unlocking of central Oregon by the railroads and freedom from its long isolation will be the chief reasons for the justification.
Redmond is on both the Oregon Trunk and the Deschutes railroads and it sees a great future now that outlets have been made to the outside world.

It looks as if 1911 will see a large influx of new settlers in the northwest.
The advance guard is now arriving as a result of the homeseekers rates which went into effect on all transcontinental railroads the 10th of this month. All trains leaving Chicago, St. Paul, St. Louis and Omaha for the northwest are heavily loaded with passengers. It is expected that many will stop off in Montana and Idaho, but ultimately continue through to the coast. Inquiry among the travelers by railroad men indicates that they are mostly interested in Oregon and Washington lands.

That a hard fight is going to be made on the employers' liability law enacted at the recent session of the Washington legislature, is a foregone conclusion. In the light of the lowest terms to which the measure can be reduced it is nothing more than an unfair tax that is bound to work a hardship on a number of manufacturing interests in the state.
For a long time the commercial bodies have been working to build up industrial communities. It is feared that, in the face of this new law, it will be hard to bring new enterprises into Washington. Those who have studied the law say that its own framers do not appreciate the danger of the measure they have written on the statute books.

People of Washington who believe that more good roads are necessary to promote internal development are disappointed in Gov. M. E. Hay's failure to get results. In an effort to insure his reappointment he has been trying to build up a vote-getting machine. Toward this end, he requested and obtained Highway Commissioner Bowly's resignation. Then he offered the place to half a dozen men but none of them have accepted. In the meantime, uncertainty prevails in the department.
The actions of the legislature have not helped to ease the situation any, either. Elaborate road plans for the state, prepared at a large cost, have been overthrown or held in abeyance.
Instead of taking a firm stand Gov.
Hay's road policy has been irresolute.
The result is that he will run against some pretty strong opposition among the good roads people when the primaries are held in 1912.

Roosevelt's Boyhood
BY GEORGE BRAGG
Roosevelt was born in New York City, on East 20th street, in the year 1858. As a child he was puny and sickly. He was so weak that his parents traveled as far as Egypt with him for his health.

As soon as he was old enough, Roosevelt read "The Leather Stocking Tales" of Cooper and the old-time youth's stories of Major Redd.
At the age of 12 Roosevelt selected his calling in life. He resolved to be a naturalist and roam the wilderness studying plants and animals, and to be a professor and draw a salary. To do this, he knew he had to have strength and health.

The boys threw insults at him and gave him numerous challenges. This hurt his pride, but to take these up required brawn. So at the age of 12 Roosevelt turned Spartan. He lived in the open air, played with the rude and caressed the rough, and indeed did everything that a Spartan would do, save steal.

Roosevelt was successful in his work for muscle, but there is no record of his doing a heroic act or a brave deed in his boyhood or youth.
He entered Harvard College in his 18th year. He loved study and was ambitious. While at Harvard he went into the games of skill with the rest of the boys. He was a fine boxer and wrestler; he rode horseback, rowed a boat and ran. He was the same in oratory as in boxing, wrestling and his books, strong and to the point.

Roosevelt, like his father, was religious and went to church every Sabbath. He first went to the Episcopal church, there being no Dutch reformed church in Cambridge. He was given a class to teach.

One Sunday morning one of Roosevelt's scholars presented himself with a black eye. Knowing that it had been obtained in the good old way, with a fist, Roosevelt asked for particulars. The boy had met with a smart lad who spoke scornfully of the Sunday schools. This being too much for the boy, he first took off his coat and hung it on the post Longfellow's fence; then he had obtained the black eye while giving the other "his fill." Roosevelt was so pleased that he gave the boy a dollar bill. His parents heard of this and disapproved of it, so by particular Episcopal request he moved to the Presbyterian church next door.

Roosevelt's father died while he was in college, and left him about $50,000.

In 1880, at the age of 22, Roosevelt graduated from Harvard. He decided to study law, and later entered politics. His motto was "Better faithful than famous." He had his eyes on the White House at this time.
He began to drop out with his fellows. They tried to urge him not to turn politician, reminding him of his wealth, but he said: "I would rather be in the governing class than in the class governed." He cared nothing for money.

George William Curtis said of him more than a score of years ago:
"You will know more, a deal more, of him later. He will be a figure, not a figure head."
