INTERESTING PAPER ON "BROTHERHOOD"

Paper by Leroy Armstrong, read at the meeting of the Men's Brotherhood of the United Brethren church, June 9th:

If this little effort of mine shall be intolerably dull, you may blame your president, for he told me the entertainment of the evening would be provided by that eminent travelling humorist, or humorous traveler, Mr. Woodworth. It was suggested that I confine myself to instruction and advice.

I am peculiarly qualified to give instruction and advice in matters pertaining to the organization and conduct of Brotherhoods, because I have never either organized nor conducted one.

Years ago my city editor assigned me the unusual duty of reporting the yacht races on Geneva Lake, near Chicago, and when I protested that I didn't know the difference between a catboat and a catamaran, the city editor replied: "That is why I am sending you. You will have no prejudices."

As to advice: Older people than most of those before me found much pleasure one time in reading Owen Meredith's "Luella." In that widely circulated and much neglected little volume you may still find these lines: "Of all the good things in this world around us, the one most abundantly furnished and found us, and which, for that reason, we care least about, and can best spare our friends, is good counsel, no doubt."

Therefore, I advise: You have organized a brotherhood, the purposes of which are set out in your charter. They were read by your pastor two weeks ago at Mr. Woodworth's house. Billed down, they may be expressed in three words: Help each other. Begin by every one in the membership helping all the others. Help in this meeting, by making the deliberations wise, by recognizing authority and observing order; and at all possible times adding to the innocent pleasure of every one in the organization. Tonight would be a good time to begin. Help your brother outside--when you buy of him, when you sell to him, when you speak of him to others, when you meet him in the street.

Brotherhood implies fatherhood, parenthood. And one attribute of that relation is authority. Find what are your laws, and obey them, and help your brother to understand them, and obey them, too. Recognize the right to control, the obligation to obey, for back of the little brief authority which clothes your officers, which speaks in your charter, is the controlling presence of your church; and back of that church, and back of all others, and back of every good effort in all the world, whatever its name and wherever it is found, is the great Law which controls, which punishes infractions and rewards obediences. There is no mercant, no empty promise in the words: "Seek ye first the kingdom of righteousness, and all these things will be added unto you."

When the striking teamsters in Chicago left off sluging policemen long enough to wait upon Theodore Roosevelt at the Auditorium hotel, asking for an expression of sympathy and endorsement, that true American citizen told them: "Before you ask public endorsement, restore public order. Remember that in striking one policeman you are striking all that the policemen stand for, for back of the city is the state, and back of the state is the nation. And don't forget the nation."

Brotherhoods can not safely or wisely forget fatherhood--order, system, authority.

Also, Brotherhoods imply big and little brothers. A boy, the son of a good Hood River man, was walking beside me one morning when we met a business man, a busy and a prosperous man. He spoke to me, and then called cheerily to my young companion, "Good morning, Bob." "I tell you," said the little fellow as we passed along, "It does make a kid feel good to have a big man speak to him." That might be a good thing for big brothers to remember.

Brotherhoods are not new. In the Christian church they are almost as old as our era, but for the most part they have been organized to get out of the world. Having found how difficult, maybe thankless, it is to help humanity, men have retired inside stone walls, and devoted all their years to study and contemplation. They have worn distinctive Brotherhood garb, and no one not gowned as they was a brother. But we have one lesson at least to learn from them. They were in earnest, and those Brotherhoods which worked in the world instead of retiring from it, did things. In the Roman Catholic church the Jesuits--one of the biggest of Brotherhoods--has much to its credit. We must not forget Marquette and Kollet. They strove and sacrificed for their Brotherhood and for their church, but they helped all mankind.

There have been Brotherhoods in crime; and you who follow the cablegrams in eastern papers must be amazed at the strength and influence of the Camorra--that brotherhood in Italy, which we cannot understand, and which all that is fair and good in the Italian nation must condemn. But the point is: A Brotherhood well adhered to gets results.

Your own is better than the Brotherhood of the monks, and far worthier than any which forgets that back of the charter and the official board stands the church, and back of the church the immutable laws of God. Instead of withdrawing from the world and letting humanity go hang if it wants to, you will help humanity. You will make men look back with pleasure to your past meetings, and forward with delight to others that are to come. You take life as it is, and make it a little stronger, a little cleaner, a little happier, and a little better.

And the pay is big. No one can help others without himself being helped. They are happiest who make others happy. They are purest who have done the most to make others and keep others pure. They are most sure of a good life hereafter who help their fellow men live a good life here.
