PORTLAND-LOST LAKE ROAD BEING BUILT

A letter from T. H. Sherrard, forest supervisor, to Mr. Leslie Butler, gives information about the road the government is building through the forest reserve from a point to connect with the road to government camp from Portland. Mr. Sherrard says: "I missed you in Hood River last week when I stopped in at the bank to tell you a little more about the road.

"The preliminary location, so far as it could be done by hand level work, was completed a week ago, and the transit crew is now getting the profiles.

"The results of the preliminary location were even more encouraging than we expected, for it was found that the road can be put through on a grade not to exceed five per cent. at any point, with many stretches practically level.

"There are several bridges to be built on this side of the Summit, but no difficulties were found. In fact, we know definitely now from the preliminary location that the route offers a remarkable opportunity for a scenic road across the mountains.

"From the conditions found this spring, when the snow is a month later in going off than normal, we believe that road will be open seven months in the year.

"We figure that with the $10,000 appropriated by Congress for use this summer, we can make the survey of the road, put the trail through the 15 miles and build the road on this side of the mountains to the Summit, exclusive of the bridges.

"In reply to your question, there will be about three miles of new road necessary from the boundary of the National Forest to the proper junction of the new road with the old road to Lost Lake, at the bridge across the west fork of Hood River. Estimating roughly, a good dirt road can be built here for about $1,000 per mile."

Two Miles Cello Canal Finished

Simplicity of La Fontaine.

Apologies of the simple, philosophical La Fontaine I either read or heard a touching trait of his simplicity. He was wise enough to despise money and spent all he had from not knowing its value or caring for its production. When reduced to nothing he lived with a friend who loved him and supplied the very few wants he had. This friend died. One who had known La Fontaine at his house immediately went to invite him to come and live with him. He met La Fontaine on the road to his chateau, and upon hearing the invitation the poet replied, "J'y viens" ("I was going there"). The naïveté of his reply is very striking.—From Lady Holland's Journal.

A Tartar Proverb.

A Turco-Tartar proverb throws a strong light on the question of the amount of veracity to be looked for in official documents by orientals. The proverb runs as follows: "He who speaks the truth will be expelled from nine villages."
