

CAMAS PRAIRIE DISTRICT HAS GREAT POSSIBILITIES

 products its value will increase ten fold. In any event once reclaimed its value as hay or grain land is unquestionable and, once cultivated, will increase the resources of the country to a high figure.
 At present ideas as to its cultivation adhere to old customs, but any innovation that leads to a more remunerative crop will quickly see big tracts cut into small ones, and a crop produced that will pay even bigger than five tons of timothy to the acre, a yield now estimated for the drainage district.
 The success of the country for stock is apparent in its fine horses and cattle, and its dairy products are also a large source of income. Now that the attention of experienced fruitmen has been attracted to the volcanic ash and red shot soil of its timbered hills, it is quite likely that apple orchards will follow and when fruit is added to its other products Camas Valley will have a combination of resources and income ideal indeed from the standpoint of the agriculturist.

 When it is taken into consideration that this rich land, ready for the plow, can now be bought for $50 to $75 an acre, or a half section for an amount that would only buy a ten-acre orchard at Hood River, it is not surprising that a number of well-informed and enterprising men have recently gone there and bought large tracts. Either as an income producer or from a speculative point of view, the opportunities offered are such as can be found in few districts, even in this big and bonanza agricultural territory of the Northwest. Until recently the long stage ride has caused this country to be comparatively little known. The fast moving automobile, however, has penetrated to the Camas Valley and it has been brought much nearer our world.

 Visiting the Camas country for the first time on a duck hunting trip a year or two ago, Burnette Duncan became interested in its possibilities and since then has secured big land holdings there. Through him other Hood River men have become interested, among them J. R. Putnam, E. O. Hall, Fred Wasson and N. W. Bone. The drainage ditch is expected to be completed this fall, and Messrs. Bone and Duncan are preparing to plow a large acreage and put it under cultivation. The Hood River men are enthusiastic over their investment, and their glowing accounts of the country are causing many others to become interested.

 From the Columbia river for 25 miles up the White Salmon valley big strides have been made in developing orchard land. The Mt. Adams Orchard Company, between Husum and Gilmer, has set 400 acres to trees, while there is acre after acre of smaller holdings in many directions. Big in extent, this country adjacent to the White Salmon and Klickitat rivers is bigger still in possibilities, and it is therefore no cause for wonder that the railroads are casting covetous eyes on it. Apart from its other products, its timber must in the near future become too valuable to be left standing. Its transportation problem is, therefore, but a matter of time, and with it a big rise in land values.

SPOKANE WILL HOLD ANOTHER APPLE SHOW
 Spokane has decided to hold another apple show this fall. The business men there have subscribed $35,000.00 to defray the expenses. For the past three years Spokane has done honor to the King of Fruits, and the shows have always attracted large crowds. Last year the display was taken East, following the close in Spokane. This venture, however, did not prove a success.
Washington Shy On Publicity Work
 Because of the last legislature's failure to allow sufficient money for publicity purposes, Washington, it is said, is suffering today. People writing to Olympia for information about Washington, get little satisfaction. Secretary Howell admits he is hampered. In Oregon they are much more far-sighted, with the result that the state is distributing literature widely and getting many new settlers. The railroads are doing most of the publicity work for Washington this year.
