Entered as second-class matter, Feb. 10, 1909, at the post office at Hood River, Oregon, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Justice or Bloodshed—Which?

The shooting of Ryan and Robinson by Marshal Lewis, who was attempting to arrest them, has caused a division of opinion as to whether this last resort of an officer was necessary.

The Trust Evil

The grip of the trusts on the American people was never more apparent than at the present time, when, notwithstanding the legal activity against them, and in face of the fines imposed, they have raised the price of the necessities of life.

Empty words and a measure of content

Empty words and a measure of content have stilled the American people for many a year, but, as in times gone by, there will come a period of hardship and distress parallel to that in which a Roman senator remarked, "You can't talk to a man's belly; it has no ears!"

is hidden under the name of commercialism. Under this respectable title we are forced to accept him, but not in the individual. The time has passed when human life was cheap to acts of violence, and no man is so great that he can send another into eternity to establish his rule without being called to account.

There appear to be two mistakes in this instance of gunplay. The one alluded to, and the fact that Hickox did not, when he had received assistance, call up the bystanders and take his obstreperous foe to jail.

first battle between the trusts and the government is the fully-matured fruit of regulation, it must be said that it leaves an exceeding bitter taste—a taste fraught with grave results to the stability of the nation when its people also become bitter and will no longer allow themselves to be plundered by these powerful and unscrupulous highway-men, who are protected in their nefarious profit-reaping by the tariff, while the people's money is spent in fighting them in the courts and then again forced from their pockets to pay the verdict.
