TAFT LIKE CLEVELAND

Resembles Other Big President in Independence.
 "Another Cleveland," is what President Taft has been termed during the past year. People who have studied his administration and his courageous devotion to pledges of the platform upon which he was elected have given him this title. His absolute indifference to attacks of intemperate and irresponsible writers, his firm adherence to what he considers the best interests of the whole country, and his disregard of the varying political currents, seem to justify this characterization.

The president is not a politician. He has made this evident throughout his term by his refusal to take advantage of every opportunity to boost himself into popular favor. With the firm belief that the platform upon which he was elected meant something, and his earnest work to redeem every pledge made, he has been too intention upon his business to consider mere popularity. He has been satisfied to do what is best for the whole country, leaving the verdict to the public. Baseless charges are bound to fall to the ground; perhaps not today, but surely tomorrow.

 This was President Cleveland's attitude throughout his administration. He was independent and this won for him intemperate criticism, even bordering on vilification. To-day the American people realize the greatness of Grover Cleveland, just as in the future they are bound to acknowledge the similar eminence among presidents of William H. Taft.

Signs of the turning tide are apparent now. The press of the country is more inclined than it ever has been, to grant the president a fair hearing. People are realizing to a greater extent than at any time during the Taft administration, that the work of the past three years has been for the benefit of the country as a whole. No interest or faction has been able to swerve the president to serve the advantage of anybody and he has had the courage to refuse to be popular in order to be just.

When Death Comes to Venice.
 When any one dies in Venice there is posted up on his house and upon the neighboring houses, by way of information, a printed placard, giving the name, the age, the birthplace, the cause of death and a certificate that the dead received the sacraments, that he died like a good Christian, and asking the faithful to pray for him.—Theophile Gautier, "Travels in Italy."

Sauce.
 "The impudence of that young brother of mine!" exclaimed Mrs. Nagger. "He just told me I was no chicken when I married you."
 "Well," replied her unsympathetic husband, "that's true enough. You weren't a chicken, were you?"
 "No; I was a goose."—Philadelphia Press.

No wise man ever wished to be younger.—Swift.
