The Dry Season Is Nearly Here

Look at your wagon wheels and see if the tires do not need tightening. Loose tires will cause loose spokes and otherwise damages the wheels.

Better have this work done before you use the wagon to haul your crop of berries.

Bring your wagon to us and let us put it in good shape for the coming dry season.

POETIC TRIBUTE IS PAID MOUNT HOOD

Frank W. Stone of Vancouver, Wash., has penned the latest poem on Mt. Hood, as follows.

In the dawn of early morning,
When the hosts of night have fled,
The march of ages scorning,
Hood rears his snow-capped head;
Sulline and alone in his glory,
Guarding the valley below,
Rugged and aged and hoary,
Crowned with eternal snow.

Towering above the foothills,
In a shimmer of rosy light,
We feel surcease of life's ills,
And heed not time's rapid flight,
As we gaze on the mystic shading
Of orange, and crimson and gold,
And watch the shadows fading
From crag and pinnacle bold.

Deep-seamed and thunder-riven,
And gashed by glacial flow,
Shrouded in snow wreaths driven
By fierce winds from below;
While ever above the storm cloud,
The summit, at break of day,
Rises free from the mist cloud,
Reflecting the sun's first ray.

Kissed by the sun's first greeting,
As bridegroom salutes the bride,
Boreas and Phoebus meeting,
Ardor and chilling pride,
Painting the glaring ice fields,
A marvelous rosy hue,
Tints no human brush yields,
Glow and then pass from view.

And when the dark invaders,
Steal upward through gorge and glen,
The hosts of light, crusaders,
Are forced to retreat again;
On the crest of Hood white gleaming,
They make a last brave stand,
Till o'er it dark cohorts streaming,
Again night shadows the land.

Empires may rise and perish,
Seasons will come and go,
The works of man we cherish,
Will fade as they older grow,
But thou, majestic mountain,
Like God's eternal truth,
Of crystal streams and fountain,
Art symbol of age and youth.

OREGON IS BEST STATE FOR CHERRIES

According to a recent O. A. C. bulletin in no part of the United States are cherries grown to so high a degree of perfection as in the state of Oregon. Their size and deliciousness have given them a world wide reputation. In Eastern Oregon in such regions as The Dalles, Cove, etc., cherries are grown largely for shipping purposes; while in Western Oregon and in the Willamette Valley especially they are grown for both shipping and canning. Thousands of acres of fine cherry lands are lying idle. The leading commercial varieties are Royal Anne, Lambert and Bing; the Royal Anne being the standard canning berry and the Lambert and Bing the shipping varieties.

Cherries should never be placed on soil that is heavy or water logged, or, in short, should never suffer from wet feet. They do well on the lighter loams and demand good drainage. Many of the rolling hill lands, such as one finds in Western Oregon, are admirably adapted to this fruit. They also flourish on some of the well-drained sand and silt loams along the rivers. They are large growing trees, and will need at least 35 feet when reaching their mature size. They should be given very good spring cultivation, although in many localities it would be very desirable not to give spring preparation so early as to cause the sap to rise before the permanent spring weather. The ground should be thoroughly prepared and frequent cultivations follow until mid-summer. Cherries grow especially well in lawns and it may be that at some time the most successful cherry culture will be practiced where cherries are placed in the sod of some growing crop, and irrigation water provided.

There seems to be a notion prevalent that cherries should not be cultivated or pruned. This is an erroneous opinion and is not based upon facts. While it is true that gummosis kills off quite a large number of cherry trees especially those having light flesh, nevertheless I am convinced that more large cherry trees die from neglect than from any other cause.

There is a varied market for the output. They can be packed and shipped east, canned, dried and pickled for Maraschino cherries. More attention should be given to this industry. Pre-cooling plants should be established for shipping points. The industry offers an attractive investment. The production at times is extremely heavy, the yield reaching as high as from 500 to 800 pounds of fruit on a single tree. One should fairly expect to net from $100 to $200 per acre on cherries, although undoubtedly at times much better figures are realized, such as $600 to $700 per acre.

Elks at the Portland convention will eat Mosler red cheek ptppins, the committee setting out to buy the best apples possible at this time of the year. They found the ptppins of our neighboring town in fine condition.

Gillett State Bank paid its second semi-annual dividend of 4 per cent on July 1st, besides placing $500 to the surplus fund. This shows a net earning of 6 per cent since January 1. It also indicates encouraging business conditions throughout the district.

Just when it was believed that everything was already to oil the streets, the matter fell through, the Road Oiling Company, engaged at Hood River, deciding not to risk the passage of their heavy truck to the ferry raft, though Mr. Dean was willing to take the chances. The Standard Oil Company is loath to sell oil in barrels, nothing less than 250 barrel tank cars. Buying crude oil by the barrel, the company says, would prove very expensive.
