SLIDING DOWN A ROPE.
It is Both Easy and Safe When Done in Sailor Style.
Sliding down a rope is not so simple as it seems. Few know how to do it properly. If you try to descend by letting the rope slide through your hands the friction will burn the palms so that you will have to let go after a few feet. If you try to lower your weight from one hand hold to another you are sure to become tired and will be forced to drop. You cannot slide with the rope between your knees, for the swaying of your body will jerk the rope out of the clutch of your knees, and then you are likely to fall.
The easiest and safest method you can employ is that used by firemen and sailors. Standing upright, throw out your right leg and give it a turn around the rope. Next put the rope in the crook of your right elbow and clasp it tightly, not in your hand, but in your arm.
In that way you can slide to safety without the slightest trouble. The rope does not touch any part of the body that is not protected by clothing, and your speed can be regulated by either straightening or cramping your leg. Once learned this method of sliding down a rope may prove in an emergency the means of saving your life or the lives of other persons.—Youth's Companion.

ALPINE LIFE LINES.
The Ropes Are Selected For Strength, Flexibility and Lightness.
The ropes used by Alpine climbers is of special manufacture, combining as far as possible the differing qualities of strength, flexibility and lightness.
Three qualities are in general use, being made from silk, Italian and Manila hemp respectively, and occasionally, when cost is not a consideration, of silk. The latter, though very light and strong, is not so durable as the others. That which finds most favor among British mountaineers is known as Buckingham's Alpines rope. It is made of the best Manila hemp.
In the year 1864, Mr. McLeish recalls, a committee of the Alpine club made tests upon a number of ropes suitable for mountaineering. Of the two that were approved one was made of Italian hemp and the other of Manila. They both had a breaking strain of two tons and sustained the weight of a twelve stone man after falling from a height of ten feet.
Nonmountaineers have sometimes considered this insufficient, but it is highly problematical whether the human anatomy could survive the sudden compression of a thin rope arising from any greater fall.—Fry's Magazine.

Help With a String to It.
In an office on upper Wall street, where they make a specialty of the "coppers," a cousin of the head of the firm, after several bad "breaks," found his balance reduced to a very low figure. The Wall street man felt bad about it and offered to take the account in hand himself, the relative naturally agreeing. The first transaction was the short sale of a lot of Reading. Before 3 o'clock that day the stock had jumped up six points and the account was wiped out.
It reminds one of what happened on an East River ferryboat the other day when a passenger fell overboard. The man was strong and well able to swim—that is, he was well able to swim until a well meaning but excited deck hand threw a twenty pound life belt down on the top of his head.—Puck.

Tailors as Literary Men.
One does not look for literary men among tailors, but none the less the trade can claim some illustrious names. John Stow, the antiquary and author of the "Survey of London," for instance, began life as a tailor, and another famous tailoring antiquary was John Speed, one of England's early map makers and member of the Society of Antiquaries. And then there was Robert Hill, "the learned tailor" of Birmingham, who contrived to teach himself Greek and Hebrew and became famous as a writer of theological treatises. And George Meredith was born over a tailor's shop.—London Globe.

Placing Himself.
A man who was much in need of sleep rolled out of bed during the night. The jar did not awake him thoroughly, and his hand wandered in exploration. It encountered the mesh of some protruding springs and a sturdy iron corner post. "In jail at last," he murmured as he went off into another deep sleep.

The Baseball Courtship.
"How do I stand with you, little girl?" inquired the ardent fan.
"You have a percentage of about .786 just now," answered the lady fan, "and lead the league."
"I'm glad to hear that. I was afraid I was in the second division."—Kansas City Journal.

Man Worships Something.
Man always worships something. Always he sees the infinite shadowed forth in something finite, and, indeed, can and must so see it in any finite thing, once tempt him well to fix his eyes thereon.—Carlyle.

Cause and Effect.
Mrs. Naylor—You seem rather hoarse this morning, dear. Mrs. Lushman—Well, my husband came home rather late last night.
Slap an extinguisher upon your troy if you are unhappily blessed with a veil of it.—Lamb.
