BELMONT

Mr. Nunamaker was seen passing last Friday with a brand new car, but paused at the corner in the ditch. No harm resulted from the tip.
Mrs. Wm Eby has returned from her visit somewhat improved in health.
Words fail to express the gratitude our pastor feels toward Peter Nelson and other friends in this his hour of need. Mr. Nelson collected $45 from men under his employ at the planer and presented the money to the pastor as a slight expression of sympathy for him in his affliction. Mr. Chandler left yesterday for Spokane, where he will place his wife in the Deaconess' home for treatment.

The Musical Club will meet with Mrs. Ahuhgen Tuesday.

(Too late for last week.)

Mrs. Bishop entertained the Ladies' Aid last week.
Sam Eby is seen very early at the planer these mornings. He is hauling in his winter wood.

UNDERWOOD HEIGHTS

The Underwood Heights Water Company held a meeting Saturday, August 17th. It was not as well attended as it should have been. There are several water supplies and routes under consideration and in a short time we hope water will be piped all along the Heights. It will enhance the value of property and hasten development. In the next fifteen years, when Portland has a million inhabitants, all the heights along this part of the Columbia will be occupied by the villas of merchant princes and millionaires, provided we continue to grow such citizens. No more beautiful and inspiring scenery is to be found in the world than that viewed from Underwood Heights. Out in front of us stretches Hood River, the peaceful valley whose name has gone around the world; to the right and the left is the mighty gorge of the Columbia, grander than the Hudson, as the Hudson is grander than the Rhine; and the vast snow fields of Adams and Hood flung into the upper air by the hand of the Omnipotent—an extravaganza of scenery, fit frame work for the population soon to fill these slopes and valleys. We are making history here every day, as back in Boston they try to write it.
The Northwestern Electric Power Company has had a crew of surveyors at work passing over the Heights locating poles and buying right-of-way for their big wires soon to carry power from the White Salmon to Portland and way points. It is also in the project to supply the Heights with electric lights, which will be an addition to our numerous assets.
Besides fruit, there will be a larger crop of potatoes with us than last year, but we need organization and better methods of marketing the crop if we are to get real values. When it costs as much to market a product as the producer receives, something is wrong, radically wrong. In scientific methods of marketing, as well as general farm practice, we are fifty years behind Europe, and Mr. Grubb, the potato expert of Colorado, says our government agricultural experiment stations are beginning their work of "discovery" where farmers of Europe left off fifty years ago. GOLDEN CROSS IS SWALLOWED BY FISH

Following is a fish story, but as it is told by Mrs. J. E. Ferguson, Sunday School teacher at Odell, and vouched for by State Secretary Chas. A. Phillips, its veracity cannot be questioned. While Mrs. Ferguson and a few friends were looking into the trout pond at Wauquiquin Sunday a golden Maltose cross worn by her became detached and fell into the pond. While one member of the party was rigging up a dipper on the end of a pole the rest of the party watched the gold cross. Just as they were about to dip up the cross a large trout swam up and swallowed the trinket, which was fully as large as a quarter. It was hard for the fish to swallow and even the watchers couldn't believe it for a moment. Mrs. Ferguson has placed a standing order for trout with Mr. Rand and has not yet given up recovering the cross.

POISON FOR SLUGS

The cherry slug, which does much damage to both cherry and pear trees during midsummer, may be effectively kept in check by spraying the trees profusely with a solution made by mixing thoroughly two pounds of commercial arsenate of lead in four forty will gallons of water. Paris green will serve the same purpose, if the arsenate cannot be secured, and should be used at the rate of one pound to 150 gallons of water. In making the latter solution quicklime should be added at the rate of one pound for each fifty gallons of water, to keep the paris green from burning the foliage. Of the two spray mixtures the latter is the cheaper, but does not adhere to the leaves as well as the arsenate of lead. Either one of these sprays is effective for spraying for the apple worm, potato bug and other eating worms or insects.

SHOULD GIVE IT A TRIAL.

In view of the quite general failure of clover in many of the northern states during the past two years, and this the result of the unusually dry summers that have prevailed, there would seem to be good grounds this year for giving alfalfa a test. The reason for doing this does not need to be explained to those who have tried the legume. For the benefit of those who have not and need some further argument we give the brief facts in connection with a small patch with which the writer is acquainted which was started three years ago by a north Iowa farmer who lives in a section where it has seemed to be accepted that alfalfa will not flourish. Last season, in spite of an exceptionally dry summer, this patch yielded at the rate of four tons per acre when nearby clover meadows were not producing half a ton. The first cutting this season was made some ten days ago, and the measured yield was three and two-thirds tons per acre of the finest and most nutritious hay that can be grown. If conditions for the remainder of the season are at all favorable there should be two more cuttings that will average a ton and a half each. This is a modest estimate, and there will likely be more than this. But on this estimate it makes an acre yield for the year of six and two-thirds tons, worth, at $12 per ton, $80. Some will say, "This sounds good, but how can a fellow get started?" Getting a start in alfalfa is not a difficult undertaking if conditions are right, but it is well to start with a small patch, say five acres. First the piece of land selected should be well drained, have a porous rather than an impervious subsoil and be sweet rather than sour—that is, in need of lime. For the latitude of the northern states a piece from which early oats or rye has just been taken will do well. This should be plowed to a good depth as soon as possible, top dressed with eight or nine tons of barnyard manure if fine; otherwise it should be spread before the plowing is done. The field thus prepared should be disked thoroughly, and at intervals of about ten days it should be disked lightly until the first or second week in August. This will put the soil in fine tilth and kill no end of weeds, which are one of the chief obstacles to growing alfalfa in humid sections. If it can be had, soil from an alfalfa field or a small quantity of manure from stock that has been fed alfalfa should be applied before the last disking for the purpose of inoculating the soil. In case neither of these sources of nitrogen fixing bacteria is available soil from the roadside where sweet clover is growing will answer the purpose. About Aug. 15 the tract should be seeded. If the weather is very dry it is best to use a disk drill, sowing the seed to the depth of about two inches. If the soil contains abundant moisture the seed may be broadcasted. In either case it is well to go over the field both ways to insure an even stand. From eighteen to twenty pounds should be used per acre. If conditions are at all favorable the legume will make a nice growth by fall, and this should be allowed to remain on the ground to serve as a catch for the snow.

WEEDS AND CULTIVATION.

The stirring of the soil for the purpose of conserving moisture rather than the killing of weeds should be the primary object in cultivation. For this reason the soil in which crops are growing should be stirred frequently, whether there are any weeds in sight or not. This point is nicely brought out in a cross fence colloquy between two corn belt farmers during the dry spell last August. The one who had given his ground none too thorough preparation in the spring and who somehow had the idea that the sole purpose of cultivation was killing weeds was sort of coddling his neighbor for cultivating his corn so much when there were no weeds in sight, his contention being that the more the soil was stirred the more the moisture would escape. His neighbor, at the moment turning the row with his riding corn plow, tried to explain to him the real reason for cultivating, but it made no impression. At busking time the one who kept up the cultivation of his field got forty-five bushels per acre, while the fellow who tilted to kill weeds got only twenty five bushels. And the only difference between the two fields was the separate barbed wire fence.

DOPE FOR GRASSHOPPERS.

While fall plowing of the ground is one of the best methods for keeping grasshoppers in check, in that it buries a great many of their egg pods or breaks them open and thus exposes them to the moisture and attacks of birds and mice, very effective work can be done by means of poison. While poisoned bran is used, it should not be used in places to which poultry or stock have access or where quail or other wild fowl range. A safer poison is the chiddle mixture, which is made of fresh horse droppings, salt and paris green. Five parts of the droppings will make approximately 100 pounds, and to this should be added a half of water, in which two pounds of salt and a pound of paris green have been added, and the whole mass stirred thoroughly. This dope should be scattered about the fields in small portions, the amount used depending upon the number of hoppers. It has been found that a small pile of the bait will draw the hoppers a distance of forty feet, the salt in the mixture being that which attracts them.
