"The Lottery Man"
In the Shuberts production of "The Lottery Man" to be presented here Friday, Rida Johnson Young has seized upon a prevalent custom of some newspapers to increase their circulation by various schemes. Mrs. Young has made her central figure in her now famous Bijou Theatre successful comedy, a newspaper reporter, Jack Wright. Wright owes his employer a sum of money and to square the account he agrees to turn in one of the most sensational scoops the paper has ever known.

His idea is for the sheet to conduct a lottery with himself as the prize. The proprietor explains that lotteries are against the law. The promoter says that this point can be evaded because the law says: "Prizes shall not be given away." As the prize is to be a person who will give himself away a clear case of evasion is established. The lottery is announced. Thousands of old mads—all sorts and conditions—buy coupons at one dollar each. Meantime Wright falls in love with a charming girl. Naturally he fears that he may be won by someone else and he starts a crusade to get possession of as many tickets as his limited means will permit. Even his devoted mother pawns some family trinkets in order that she may help her son.

Finally the last day is announced. The winning number is 3333, and it is held by Lizzie, an old maid, and a very old one, in the household of the newspaper owner. Lizzie refuses to give it up. She has waited many years for the opportunity. It is discovered, however, that she has stolen the ticket from the cook. With this clue the reporter threatens her with arrest. Of course, the coupon is surrendered and Jack Wright gets the girl of his choice.
