Servian Makes Offering to Bishop Who Praises Countrymen

There was rather a novel incident at the power company's camp a few days ago at the conclusion of an address by Bishop Paddock. During the address the bishop had taken occasion to praise the Bulgarians and Servians for their plucky fight against the Turks. Afterwards he was approached by a Servian laborer who pressed a silver dollar into his hand. "Both my father and brother are in the Servian arm fighting against the Turks," said the man, "while my sister narrowly escaped being captured by the invading Turks. She was saved by a fellow countryman who lost his own life in saving my sister."
