But this was agreed by Miss Marvin, the state librarian, follows: that it would be possible to build a library and a good one on such a piece visable to do so unless it meant the loss of the building.

A long, narrow and steep strip of land on which to erect a fine, artistic building would prove a most difficult basement plan for public auditorium and club rooms would suffer largely.

No one can tell how soon business buildings might be built on the corners, leaving the library squeezed in at Eugene.

Do you want a $17,500 building placed on such a site?

Have you considered the advantage of having a park with fine trees, with benches and a band stand for public

Do you realize how such a building, as is planned, amid such surroundings would impress strangers?

The Carnegie Commission cannot be kept waiting.

The present park site will be for felted if not used before October, 1913. A new building should be under cover by September 15.

The question now is whether, as a business proposition, the city can afford to lose the opportunity of securing a certain number of feet of the adjoining property so that the library building may be placed to the best advantage and be surrounded by at least a small park. The financial stress in city and valley has been considered, yet this case seems sufficiently urgent to ask every citizen to conplan which seems reasonable to seens cost to the buyer. cure at least a part of the tract offer-
