Parkdale man alive after struck by train

By NEITA CECIL
The Dalles Chronicle

It's a "miracle," police said, that a man sitting cross-legged on the railroad tracks in downtown The Dalles late last Friday was not killed when he was hit by a train travelling 15 mph. Ross Walker, 24, of Parkdale, was sitting on the north side of the north tracks at East First and Laughlin streets just before midnight Friday when he was struck by a westbound train, according to police.

The Dalles Police Department reported that Walker is believed to have been talking on his phone to a friend, asking him for a ride, when he was hit by the train.

The friend reported that the phone call ended abruptly and he tried calling Walker back about 14 times.

At the scene of the accident, Walker's phone, battery and phone back were found in three different spots near him.

He was also knocked out of his shoes by the impact, the report said.

He sustained a broken pelvis, some broken ribs, a large flesh wound to his right thigh and bleeding on the brain, according to the report.

The Dalles Police Capt. Steve Baska said, in his 29 years on the force, he can recount perhaps six incidents where a train hit a person or vehicle, and most were fatal.

He said "it's a miracle" Walker wasn't killed. Baska said officers heard Monday morning that Walker had surgery on his pelvis and was already home recuperating.

Police had to climb over the train to get to Walker. The train came to a stop about five rail cars beyond where the man was hit, the report stated.

One officer noted in his report that the train conductor "was pretty shaken from the incident."

The report stated the conductor "blew the horn and tried to stop, doing all he could, but Walker never looked up or moved, and was struck."

Police learned Walker had been cut off from being served alcohol at the Vault Bistro & Lounge in downtown The Dalles about 11 p.m. He was hit about an hour later.

A bartender at the Vault told police she conferred with another bartender on whether or not to cut off Walker, who, she told officers, "appeared to be falling asleep" while sitting at the bar.

They cut him off, saying he could stay at the bar, but only drink non-alcoholic beverages.

When police found him, his hand had the red circle stamp of the Vault, plus a large black "x" on it, indicating he was cut off, according to police reports.

The police report noted that a security guard at the Vault caught Walker trying to finish beer in a pitcher left by another patron.

Walker asked the security guard if he had to leave. The security guard said no, then offered to call him a cab. Walker refused and left.

Walker is on probation for possession of heroin and is barred from consuming alcohol.

The police sent a message to his probation officer about the incident, but did not charge him with a probation violation.

Baska said Walker's alcohol level was not tested. He was taken to Mid-Columbia Medical Center, then to Oregon Health Science University, reports stated.

The police report was forwarded to the Oregon Liquor Control Commission.
