FIRST FRIDAY

Several hundred people of all ages attended Friday's opening at the art gallery The Remains, underground in the Union Building on Industrial Way. Garrett Arceneaux served up his Louisiana-style gumbo while Starlyn Chavez serves Full Sail ale (behind them are railcars on the Union Pacific tracks). Below, the large (and this is just part of it) perennially-expanding Foreverescape mural (comprised of 16-inch square panels that meet up and continue in all directions) by Vance Feldman, will remain on exhibit this month.
