State issues earthquake reminder: 'Be 2 Weeks Ready'

Many people in the Pacific Northwest are aware of the dangers of the Cascadia Subduction Zone since wider attention has been drawn to the 600-mile fault that runs from northern California to British Columbia, about 70-100 miles off the Pacific coast. The last Cascadia earthquake and tsunami occurred in this fault on Jan. 26, 1700, with an estimated 9.0 magnitude, according to a press release from Oregon Office of Emergency Management.

Although it's been 320 years since the last Cascadia event, we know another one will happen and that it's a good idea to be prepared. It's not a matter of if, but rather when, the next Cascadia earthquake and tsunami will strike.

Althea Rizzo, geologic hazards program coordinator for Oregon's Office of Emergency Management, says that knowing what to do, and how to be prepared for a large-scale earthquake, or any disaster, can help to calm fear and empower people to take action.

That action, says Rizzo, includes putting together a family plan and emergency kits to be 2 Weeks Ready.

Leadership in Oregon is making it a priority to get better prepared for the next Cascadia event. On Jan. 27, Governor Kate Brown was scheduled to attend an event commemorating the anniversary of Cascadia, and a briefing on the seismic safety technology called ShakeAlert, where she will also officially proclaim Jan. 26-Feb. 1 as Cascadia Earthquake Preparedness Week.

"When the next large-scale Cascadia earthquake and tsunami strike the Pacific Northwest, Oregon will face the greatest challenge of our lifetimes," said Governor Kate Brown. "I urge everyone to start conversations this week with their families, friends, and loved ones about how to be safe and as ready as possible."

Hughes, author of "The Common Wife," her account of her walk on Camina de Santiago in Spain, gave a writer's workshop at the home of her friend, Jacquie Barone, and then led a book signing and celebration of burlesque at Lucy's, with about 20 in attendance. She donated proceeds to SMART Reading, totaling about $300.
