ELEVATOR EYE A NEW DISEASE. Peculiar Malady that Affects Conductors of Lifts in High Buildings.

The "elevator eye" is a new disease that has already claimed several victims in Chicago. Only those who operate lifts in high buildings are subject to it. Half a dozen cases are now being treated by eye specialists, who for want of a better name, call the new malady "elevator eye." Sooner or later the eyes of an elevator conductor become affected. He is constantly looking out of his cage, so as to catch sight of passengers on the different floors, and the strain on the eyes begins to tell in time. He may go for a year or longer without being visibly affected, but in the long run the "elevator eye" is bound to get him. Men who operate machines in buildings of five or six stories in height have little or no fear of being affected, because there isn't much strain on the conductor's eyes in those structures. It is in the twelve or fifteen story sky-scraper that the "elevator eye" is contagious. The conductor starts from the bottom and goes to the top with his load of human freight at a speed that takes away the breath of some of the passengers. As the cage shoots upward orders are given to stop at this or that floor, and the operator must keep a pretty close watch else he will run past the stopping point.

It is the same thing on the downward trip. He must keep his eye glued to the bottom of the cage in order to catch the first glimpse of waiting passengers. This constant strain on the optic nerves causes the elevator conductor to be momentarily blind at times. He rubs his eyes and tries to fight the disease, but it gets him in the end if he sticks long enough to the elevator. A peculiar feature of the "elevator eye" in its worst stage is that one eye looks down while the other gazes upward. Specialists who have successfully treated the new malady recommend rest above all other remedies. In some cases the eyes have to be straightened. Once afflicted a person can never be permanently cured, the specialists say, unless the victim quits the elevator.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

DON JERMAN RIESCO. The Newly Elected President of the Republic of Chile. Don Jerman Riesco, who has been elected President of Chile, is what is called in that country "a moderate liberal." It is difficult to explain what the term means unless one is a resident of Chile, and has knowledge of party politics in Latin America. Senor Riesco at the polls was supported by a majority of the radicals and liberals and by part of the conservative party. He is a reactive of the retiring President, Senor Errazuriz, and was opposed in his candidacy by Don Pedro Montt, who had the support of the clericals. To a large extent the church and its attitude makes and unmake political parties in the Latin-American States. The general disposition of the priesthood to interfere with State affairs has given the party of President Riesco considerable prestige among those opposed to the union of church and state.

Thought Himself a Sponge. He arrived in Milwaukee yesterday, a tall, angular specimen of the inhabitants of the farms of northern Wisconsin. Travel-stained and weary, he dropped into a Grand avenue barber shop and bath house for a real city shave. While indulging in this luxury the barber painted in such glowing colors the wonders of their bath establishment that the rural visitor finally decided to go in for it if it broke him. Attaching himself to an attendant he was meekly led into a wonderful room of tiled floors and wall, white enameled bath tubs, and all the modern improvements of plumbing.

While the luxuriousness of it all overcame him for a while, his curiosity finally got the better of him and he proceeded to investigate. At the head of the tub was one of those patent cylindrical waste pipe regulators that empty the tub by pulling up. After giving this a slight pull he settled drearily back into the soothing water, noticing that the water was slowly diminishing. This in no way disturbed him, and in about an hour the attendant appeared, inquiring if he had had enough.

"I guess I have," said he. "I've soaked up about six inches of your god-darned water, and I reckon that's about do for me."—Milwaukee Sentinel. Not All Alike. Mrs. Crimsonbeak—it seems strange to me, if matches are made in heaven, that there should be so many unhappy marriages. Mr. Crimsonbeak—Oh, you forget; it is the matches that are made there—not the marriages. There is something the matter with the women; also, something the matter with the men.
