SKIRTS WILL CLING.

SUCH IS FASHION'S DECREE FOR THIS WINTER.

Great Elaboration of Trimming is Permissible—Velvet to Be More Generally Used than for Many Seasons—Some Other New Trimmings.

New York correspondence:

KIRTS for winter are to cling, and are to bear off as much trimming as their owners wish. The range in the latter point is from the clinging plainness displayed by harassed heroines in the third acts of melodramas to amounts of embellishment that quite equal a yarning done last summer. Skirts that cling are enforced especially for jacket suits of homespuns, camel's hair and smooth cloths. The Spanish bounce still holds its own, and the newer models are piped with velvet to match the goods, or of a shade darker. In fact, this is to be a velvet season from puts beside to-day's initial. The gown's material was tan broadcloth, and the other trimmings were tan panne velvet for revers, collar and belt, and tucked white satin for the yoke. Crimson velvet trimmed the dress shown in two-thirds length in the next picture, lace medallions and yoke, collar and ruffs of cream satin also decorating its pale gray cashmere. Probably the long-continued stylishness of grays is due to the fact that there is a great variety of suitable trimmings for them, bright colors among the showing. Apparently there will be less of untrimmed gray than has been seen in several seasons. Oyster color comes in for such treatment, and bears it well, though usually it is much tucked or pleated. The middle second gown is an illustration of this practice. The remaining dress was old rose ladies' cloth, bands of Dresden silk striped with black and finished with white silk rosettes trimming it.

This will surely be a season for long, loose coats and wraps. If the tight fitting jacket is preferred, the double breasted and box effect cut rounding in front will be to the fore. Some of these coats are finished with straps of velvet or stitched, while others are severely plain. All the coats are fastened with handsome buttons. The black velvet coat is again appearing, and is made in the raglan model or in Louis XV. style, finished with stitched bands of black taffeta or corded with fine black silk braid. Louis XV. coats have fronts of handsome Dresden silk finished with cream or ivory white lace. A deal of fine lace is put on wraps, too, as the one shown in the next picture indicates. This handsome garment was white cloth appliqued with the looks of fall costumes. The jackets are made double breasted or in box effect, and are strapped or piped with velvet bands. Not only will velvet appear on many dresses, but it will be used in quantities the like of which has not been indulged recently. In hats it will appear almost anywhere on dresses, and many handsome skirts are lavishly stitched and banded with it, the bodices matching in like degree. Dresden and oriental effects in velvet are very beautiful and will be used mainly for fronts and bodice trimmings.

A few other new trimmings appear. A line of embroidery between two bands of inset lace is a favorite trimming on light wool gowns, and sashes or scarfs of soft silk mousseline and silk are exquisitely cream lace and embroidered in fine gilt thread. It had a hood cape of white chiffon, a high collar of cream lace and a chiffon ruffle appliqued with the lace. This wrap was not a whit richer than are many such, for the coming winter is to be one of fine outside.

Black and white will be a stylish combination this fall and winter as it has been for the past two seasons, but black and pale blue will divide favor with it. Gowns of handsome black lace or spangled tulle show some trace of blue either in panne velvet or satin outlined with white or cream lace. Sometimes the gown is black and white, the buttons rhinestones and turquoise, in order to get the blue in even to a slight extent. The second dress of to-day's con-iding picture was a black and blue representative. Of embroidered. Cretonne embellishments are on the wane, especially the floral designs so stylish in spring and summer. Velvet in flowered patterns will be used for applique trimming in place of the cretonnes. This will be seen on handsome light-colored broadcloths and evening gowns. A cretonne trimming in a real Dutch blue shade is seen, looks very handsome on delicate colored cloths, and will be counted as highly desirable. So will some other variations on this general kind of trimming.

Braids are narrower, much of the half-inch widths being seen in model dresses, with souches that is extremely narrow. When greater widths are desired they usually are attained by laying side by side several of the narrower braids. Much of this wide braiding is applied in vertical lines, and there is very little of working out designs with it. A black and gold braid was used in the gown the artist
