A FAMOUS INSTITUTION. Salem Academy, in the Beautiful Wachovia Tract, North Carolina.

The centennial, recently celebrated, of the Salem Academy and College at Winston-Salem, N. C., marks the close of 100 years of usefulness of an institution which deserves to be more widely known.

REV. H. CLEWELL. They went through the horrors of the French and Indian war without suffering loss of property and were equally fortunate in the war of the revolution.

General Ignorance of the Subject Even Among the Educated. Strange it is, indeed, how lowly a place the grandest, the mother of all arts, holds in public esteem.

ARCHITECTS AND OBSCURITY. People go into ecstasies about the Parthenon. The very wise will tell you, perhaps, that Phidias designed it.

Men Stenographers Scarcce. "There is one feature of the government service that puzzles me," said a chief of division in the Treasury Department.

LIVES IN PIANO BOX. Odd Habitation of an Old Baltimore Fisherman. Not many of even the meek and lowly spirited citizens of Baltimore would take kindly to the thought of living nine months of the year in a piano box.

when the snow of the famous blizzard of February, 1898, sifted through the cracks of a shanty he was then occupying and opened its sides to the weather.

It is truly a lesson in economy of space. On a shelf running the length of the box, about a half foot below the top, were placed pipes, tobacco, a coffee pot, comb and brush, fishing tackle and many useful articles.

AUTHOR OF CYRANO. American, Not Frenchman, Created the Big-Nosed Hero. Samuel Eberly Gross, and not Edmond Rostand, the United States district court has decided.

Over in France M. Rostand, poet and dramatist, sprang into worldwide fame by giving to the play-going and reading public the story of the big-nosed hero.

Samuel Eberly Gross is a Chicago dealer in real estate as well as a writer of plays. As long ago as 1878 he put into manuscript a play entitled "The Merchant Prince of Cornville."

When Rostand's play, "Cyrano de Bergerac," appeared in 1897, or soon afterward, Mr. Gross began to hear from many of the men to whom he had given copies of "The Merchant Prince of Cornville" regarding the remarkable likeness of certain parts of his work and that of the Frenchman.
