NEW RELIGIOUS CRUSADE.

Herbert H. Booth Organizing Another Evangelical Movement.

Herbert H. Booth, who recently came to this country from England, having left the ranks of the Salvation Army, is about starting a new religious crusade in the United States.

He proposes to combine in a new form religion and art and to continue the old army practice of carrying religion to the homes of the people.

The first series will consist of illustrations to a lecture entitled "Soldiers of the Cross," and will deal with the very early days when services were held underground in the catacombs.

Later other subjects will be taken, but always the idea will be the same, history, religion and art united under one roof and with one exponent.

DOORSTEP OF NEW ENGLAND. Popham Beach, Me., the First English Settlement After Jamestown.

The first English settlement in the United States north of the James River, at Jamestown, was not at Plymouth, but at Popham Beach, at the mouth of the Kennebec River, in Maine.

The settlement at Popham Beach was made in August, 1607, a few months after the foundations of Jamestown were laid.

George Popham and Raleigh Gilbert, who arrived at the mouth of the Kennebec with 100 men and two vessels. The day after the landing work was begun digging entrenchments for what was afterward called Fort George.

To-day Popham Beach for nine months of the year is a little sleepy hamlet of a score or more of families, but from June to September the place is a flourishing summer colony.
