FROM DEATH TO LIFE.

Charles E. Norris Cures Consumption by Walking 11,000 Miles.

Three years ago Charles E. Norris of San Francisco was told by physicians that he could not live over three months. One lung, they said, was entirely gone from the ravages of consumption, and the most he could do would be to take to his bed and die as comfortably as possible. But Norris was game. Determined to fight to the last, the intrepid invalid, who could scarcely crawl, took to the road, and along the 11,340 miles he has tramped since then found increasing health, until to-day he is a hale and hearty man.

His case, which has been the subject of inquiry by physicians all over the country, says the New York Herald, is further evidence of the efficacy of the "open air" cure, which they are now recommending. He says that it is better, because it combines with the exercise of a rugged life the care of striving for existence.

Norris is 63 years old. He had traveled extensively before he started on his consumption tramp. He had worked in many cities. He knew life and men and the knowledge gave him the courage it required to leave San Francisco with but $1.00 in his pocket and face the fight for life. His wife and daughter were dead, his brothers and sisters scattered, and no one depended upon him. His money had been frittered away on doctors' bills and medicines.

Norris is no ordinary tramp. His clothes are neat. His manners are good. He does not drink or use tobacco. He reads Shakespeare and knows the works of the great poet by heart. In January he called upon President Roosevelt and chatted with him some time about his wanderings, and the president expressed admiration of his grit.

"This was my condition when I started out from Frisco August 5, 1901," says Norris. "I weighed 96 pounds, one lung was gone. I had suffered three hemorrhages, the doctors said a fourth would finish me. They gave me three months more of life. I had $1.00 in my pocket. I was well dressed and I determined to live or die in the open.

"The first night I slept under a fence, being too weak to reach a farm house a little ways off. For the first three weeks I didn't know what day would be my last. But I did not grow any worse. My cough continued, and the pains between my shoulders did not leave me. If I had stopped, if I had given up, I would have died comfortably in a few weeks. But I set my teeth and went on. At the end of the third week I noticed a slight improvement. It continued, and before two months had passed I lost my pains and my cough had dwindled to a memory. I was growing well."

Norris' mode of life is very simple. He wanders from place to place as fancy dictates. His long journey in search of health has taken him all over the United States. He was in New York recently, and is now on his way to Buffalo. His cleanliness, straightforward manner and a fund of anecdotes have endeared him to railroad men everywhere. News of his arrival and departure are telegraphed in advance, and he is a welcome guest with all. His usual bed is on a newspaper in the waiting room of some depot. In the winter, or on the platform or baggage truck when warm weather prevails. He says he was never refused food but once, and that was by a minister in Oregon.

Mr. Norris thinks consumption sanitariums are not giving the proper treatment to obtain the best results. He says that in the so-called open air cures he has visited the people are given little or no exercise, but kept quiet, fed on milk and eggs and made fat. He holds that fatness is not healthy; that it is the power of resisting fatigue, of sustaining exertion for an extended period and of being vigorous that constitutes true health.

Austria's Strenuous Old Emperor. The venerable Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria sets an example to his subjects in strenuousness of life quite equal to that of our youthful President, says Leslie's Weekly. Winter and summer the Emperor is up at 5 in the morning. At 6 his aids-de-camp have to be ready in case they are wanted, and state business of all kinds is conducted before breakfast. The Emperor seems to be literally devoured, it is said, by a sense of duty. Everything else gives way to it. His majesty at the most trying and even tragic moments of his life has always attended just as usual to the business of the state, and those about him were startled on the day of the funeral of his only son to find the Emperor ready to sign the orders for the day exactly as usual.

Discovers Silence. When Bismarck was a boy his father desired him to become a clergyman, says Hon. Andrew D. White in the Century Magazine. In his later years the "Iron Chancellor" found humor in the suggestion.

"You probably think that if I had become a clergyman I should be a better man," he said jocosely to his wife one evening.

"I will not reply to that," she said, quietly, "for my answer would not be polite."

The Lovers. Tess—Well, their engagement is off. Jess—The idea! It was only announced yesterday. What did they quarrel about?

He Had Twenty-seven Wives. In the course of a murder trial at Cape Town recently the defendant, an aged Malay trader, admitted that he had twenty-seven wives.

THE WASHINGTON--SEATTLE

THE SCENIC HOTEL OF THE WORLD.

This magnificent tourist hotel is Seattle's most prominent architectural feature—being situated upon the highest point of land in the downtown district—300 feet above sea level. It is, however, easy of access by private tramway, by regular hotel conveyance, by street car or by carriage. The scenery from The Washington is the most superb to be found on the Pacific coast. The appointments and furnishings of The Washington are entirely modern and high-class; the cuisine and service are most satisfactory. The rates are exceedingly reasonable for a fashionable Tourist Hotel.

The Washington is situated in the midst of six acres of beautiful grounds, which with the broad driveways, green lawns, and a profusion of roses and carnations, make the location an ideal one. The scenery from The Washington and grounds is unsurpassed in the West—no other point in Seattle giving such a magnificent view as can be had from this hotel. President Roosevelt was charmed with the scene that met the eye, from the verandas and grounds of the hotel, and so expressed himself. Thousands of others, in public and private life, have come and gone since the opening of this grand hostelry, who have added their tribute to the many expressions of pleasure and satisfaction derived from a glimpse of the Puget Sound country from this vantage ground, including as it does a view of mountains, lakes, Sound, harbor and all Seattle.
