A Little Lesson In Patriotism

"Let our object be our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country."—Daniel Webster.

Alexander H. Stephens had been a member of the national House of Representatives from 1843 till he voluntarily severed his connections with it in 1859. After his retirement from Washington he had determined not to again be drawn into the conflict that was agitating the country. He was opposed to violent measures of disunion.

From his retirement he constantly advised moderation and overtures of peace. But when these were of no avail and the war had come, there was no man in Georgia more ready than Stephens to do his full duty toward the State in which he had been born and the Confederacy in whose principles he believed.

"I opposed secession," was his statement, "as a question of policy, and not one of right. When the State seceded against my judgment, I thought my ultimate allegiance was due to her, and I preferred to cast my fortunes and destiny with her and her people rather than take any other course, even though it may lead to my self-sacrifice and her ruin. In accepting a position under the new order of things"—Stephens had been appointed the Vice President of the Confederacy—"my sole object was to do all the good I could in preserving and perpetuating the principles of liberty as established under the constitution of the United States."

No one can doubt the sincerity of the man who gave all that Alexander Stephens did for the cause that he had espoused.

WORK IN HARBOR BUILDING.

Construction of a Big Deep Ocean Breakwater at San Pedro, Cal.

San Pedro, Cal., is about 100 miles north of the Mexican boundary and a few miles south of Los Angeles. When California had to have a new harbor somewhere a board of government engineers, in 1897, decided that San Pedro had the best natural advantages for constructing one. The result of their work shows that a harbor can be built almost anywhere if enough money is expended. Congress appropriated $2,900,000 for the San Pedro breakwater, extending 8,500 feet in length in the ocean, and for dredging behind it.

The breakwater is a sort of continuation of Point Fermin, to the eastward. It was planned to comprise two straight arms, connected by a curve, 1,800 feet long, of 1,910 feet radius, the westerly arm to be 3,000 feet long and the easterly arm 3,700 feet long. A gap of 2,000 feet was left between it and the shore, but this gap was crossed by a railway of tremendous strength, to enable the contractors to dump rocks for the breakwater.

The total amount of rock required, according to the government specifications, is 2,200,000 tons, of which it is estimated 770,000 are yet to be put in place. For some time the contractors have been dropping the rock at the rate of 45,000 tons a month, or four tons a minute, at a cost of $0.844 a ton. At the beginning the dumping took place in twenty-foot of water; to-day the contractors are making bigger splashes in fifty-two feet of water. The rocks are often so large that only two of them can be put on one car. There is a year and a half of dumping ahead, but already a harbor of refuge is formed, where vessels can lie in safety in all sorts of weather, behind a rock line above high water.

In Self-Defense.

O'Hooligan—Be ye z th' gintleman that advertised in th' paper for a porter, sor?

Hotel Proprietor—Yes; but I stated that all applicants must be made by mail.

O'Hooligan—Begorry, an' do ye think it do be a female O'f'm atther lookin' look?

The Real Thing.

"Say, pa," queried little Johnny Bumpkin, "what is a hero?"

"A hero, my son," replied his father, "is a man who does his duty and doesn't stand around waiting for people to put him on the back."

We are disposed to admit that every man has a right to have worthwhile days.
