RUSSIAN HOME LIFE.
 Sing, Sleeping and Smoking Chief Occupation of a Head of a House.
 The daily life of a Russian couple of the wealthier classes is singularly regular and monotonous, varying only with the changing seasons. In summer the lord of the house gets up about 7 o'clock and puts on, with the assistance of his valet de chambre, a simple costume, consisting chiefly of a faded, plentifully stained dressing gown. Having nothing particular to do, he sits down at the open window and looks into the yard.
 Toward 9 o'clock tea is announced and he goes into the dining room—a long, narrow apartment, with bare wooden floor and no furniture but a table and chairs. Here he finds his wife with the tea urn before her. In a few minutes the younger children enter the room, kiss their papa's hand and take their places around the table. As this morning meal consists merely of bread and tea it does not last long, and all disperse to their several occupations.
 The head of the house begins the labors of the day by resuming his seat at the open window and having his Turkish pipe filled and lighted by a boy whose special function is to keep his master's pipe in order. The housewife spends her morning in a more active way. As soon as the breakfast table has been cleared she goes to the larder, takes stock of the provisions, arranges the meals and gives to the cook the necessary materials with detailed instructions as to how they are to be prepared. The rest of the morning she devotes to her other household duties.
 Toward 1 o'clock dinner is announced and Ivanovitch prepares his appetite by swallowing at a gulp a wineglass of home-made bitters. Dinner is the great event of the day. Food is abundant and of good quality, but mushrooms, onions and fat play rather too important a part in the repast, and the whole is prepared with little attention to the recognized principles of hygiene. No sooner has the last dish been removed than a deathlike stillness falls upon the house. It is the time of the after-dinner siesta.
 The young folk go into the garden and all the members of the household give way to drowsiness naturally engendered by a heavy meal on a hot summer day. Ivanovitch retires to his own room, from which the flies have been carefully expelled by his pipe bearer. His wife dozes in a big armchair in the sitting room, with a pocket handkerchief spread over her face. The servants snore in the corridor, the garret or the hay shed, and even the old watchdog in the corner of the yard stretches himself out at full length on the shady side of his kennel.
 In about two hours the house gradually reawakens, doors begin to creak, the names of the various servants are bawled out in all tones, from bass to falsetto, and footsteps are heard in the yard. Soon a man servant issues from the kitchen, bearing an enormous tea urn, which puffs like a little steam engine. The family assembles for tea.
BABCOON CAUTIOUS ANIMALS.
In Spite of Their Great Strength They Are True Conservatives.
 One of the farm boys drew our attention to what seemed little more than a couple of dark specks on the slope of the hills to the right, says a writer in the Youth's Companion, but we could soon see that they were moving, and when they came within half a mile of us we could distinctly recognize them as a herd of baboons.
 The boy said he was quite sure they were on their way to the water, but to our surprise they did not make any advance. A quarter of an hour elapsed; half an hour; still no sign of their approach. All at once, as if they had started from the earth by magic, at the open end of the pond, not sixty yards from our place of ambush, stood two huge males.
 When or how they got there no one could tell. Probably they had come by a circuitous way through the valley, or it might be that they had crept straight down through the grass. They had certainly eluded our observation.
 Being anxious to watch the movements of the animals and to ascertain whether they belonged to the herd playing under the mimosa, I refrained from firing and determined to see what would follow next. Both baboons sprang toward the water, and, leaning down, they drank until they were satisfied. Then, having gravely stretched themselves, they solemnly stalked away on all fours in the direction of the herd. There was little doubt, therefore, that they belonged to the herd and had been sent forward to reconnoiter, for as soon as they got back the entire herd put itself in motion toward the pond.
 There were mothers taking care of their little ones; there were half-grown animals, the boys and girls of the company. At first only one baboon at a time came to the water's edge, and, having taken its draft, retired to the rest, but when about ten had thus ventured separately, they began to come in small groups, leaving the others rolling and jumping on the sand.
An Obstinate Stand.
 "The trouble with you," said the musical enthusiast, "is that you do not understand classical music."
 "Perhaps," answered Mr. Cumrox. "But I refuse to be regarded as a man of inferior intelligence until I find some one who is competent to prove that he understands it."—Washington Star.
 A man can feel in his pockets at any time and bring out a little ball of fux.
