PHILANTHROPISTS IN SECRET.
Persons Who Give Liberally Without Disclosing Names.

Anonymous gifts to charities are common enough, but it may be news to readers that there is a section of the community who give largely and regularly and who have a positive dread of anybody in the world knowing that they have so disposed of a penny, says London Tit-Bits.

Mr. Diddin, the secretary of the National Lifeboat Institution, informed the writer that he was going into his outer office one day when a gentleman entered and inquired, "Is Mr Diddin in?" "Yes," said the official asked for; "do you wish to see him?" "Oh, no," the stranger replied, "it will do just as well if you give this envelope into his own hands," and so saying he handed over the envelope and hurried out of the place. When it was opened it was found to contain a £1,000 bank note.

Another old gentleman entered the office one evening some seventeen or eighteen years ago, remarking, "As I happened to be passing, having noticed the name outside, I thought I would look in and see if you were in want of any money." The secretary assured him that the institution was constantly in need of money.

Without producing any at that moment, the caller then proceeded to talk politics and asked for Mr. Diddin's views on Mr. Balfour and other statesmen who were prominently before the public. The visitor appeared to agree heartily with all that the secretary said, and presently, as if to show his appreciation of these views, he produced a banknote and laid it on the desk.

They still went on talking politics, and in a little while the old gentleman brought out another bank note and laid it on top of the first one. Presently he added a third, fourth and fifth to the pile, and Mr. Diddin, then coming to the conclusion that it was the politics that were doing it, kept on talking them as long as he could. Soon £2,000 worth of bank notes lay on the table, and then the caller, who jeered to give his name, abruptly walked out of the office and has never been seen or heard of since by the officials of the institution.

The London Biblewoman's Mission was fortunate to enjoy a somewhat similar experience once every year for several years. An elderly gentleman walked into the office annually and inquired what was the total amount of the mission's deficit. When he was informed of it he put down the money and walked out. From this source the mission received £8,000 in all, a single donation on one occasion being for as much as £3,000.

Logic of the Law.
"You say your husband carries $100,000 life insurance?" asked the shrewd severer of matrimonial knots.
"Yes," replied the applicant for release from irksome restraint.
"Then, what in the world do you want with a divorce? Why don't you persuade him to buy an automobile?"
—Brooklyn Life.
