GENTLE WORDS.

BY LYDIA E. WHITE. They fall upon the weary ear, Like dew-drops on the flower, And chase away the rising fear, And cheer the lonely hour : They waken Hope in blighted hearts, And bid them I've again, And ward away the croel dart Of deep designing men.

They fall upon the wanderer's ear, Like music from on high, And wipe away the litter trur, And stay the choking sigh ; They strew the darksome ways of life With flowers that never fide, And smooth the rugged paths of strife, And light its dreary shade.

Their value greater is by far Than ocean's rarest gem, And richer than the richest star In Monarch's diadem. They bring to mind the days of yore, When me were young and gay, Ere we the hadre of sprow were. Or felt our strength decay.

They cheer us as we journey on Through this strange world of blight, And gild with Hope the rising dawn, And light the shades of night. They point us to a land of love, Where we shall droop no more Where we, like uncient Noah's dove, Shall find a peaceful shore. -Green Mountain Freeman

67 Lake Superior, besides its copper and iron freasures, has important fishing in terests. In 1840 it was known that the American company, which carried on these fisheries, exported over ten thousand bar rels of fish, besides one hundred and thirtysix barrels of oil made from the Sisquette, one of the fattest fish that swim. These latter were taken in abundance by seine on the lake shore. Hitherto the Superior fisheries have been in their infancy, in conse quence of the difficulty of the transportation of freight over the Sault Ste. Marie. Now. however, the rapids have been improved by the construction of an excellent ship canal and in another year we shall probably seethese fisheries vastly increased in impor-
